CHAPTER TWO

'We Should Expect More Of Ourselves'

by Lee Remmel
Editorial Director

Never give Lindy Infante an opening—any kind of an opening . . .

The day after the National Football League's 1988 regular season closed, the Packers' personable head coach was patiently conducting a comprehensive, year-end news conference for members of the sports media, assembled in a team meeting room at the Packer administration building.

"How much different a coach," he was innocently asked, was he then than he had been upon assuming his responsibilities ten months earlier.

Already widely celebrated for his quick and irreverent wit, Infante couldn't resist such a tempting opportunity, presented by an unsuspecting sportswriter.

"I'm about 45 years older," he facetiously rejoined. "I've got a lot more gray hair and some of what I had is no longer with me . . . It's getting thinner rather rapidly, and I expect to die of old age in a couple of years."

Having temporarily exercised his sense of humor, which obviously had survived the trauma of a 4-and-12 season, Infante proceeded to address the query in a more serious vein.

"I'm certainly more intelligent about my job now," he said. "I certainly know a lot more about it than I did ten months ago. I've done a lot of on-the-job training, so to speak. I know a lot—considerably more, obviously—about the personnel we have to work with and what it can and can't do, and what we have to do with it to try to have success.

"I feel good about where we're going," he volunteered, "(and) I feel good about the majority of people that are going to get us there."

Chapter One of the Infante era obviously was being consigned to history and its namesake, quite clearly, was already looking forward to Chapter Two.

Today, as he finds himself immersed in the 1989 season, Infante is convinced the chances of "getting there" are directly related to elevated expectations—both individually and collectively.

"I think that we as a football team have to expect more of ourselves this year than we did last year," he asserted, thereby setting the tone for the Green and Gold's '89 agenda.

"I think we had some hopes last year," Infante acknowledged, "(but) after having been through it, I'm not too sure we expected to do well. I think we hoped we were going to do well and we felt we had a chance to do well, but we didn't expect to do it as much as we're going to have to expect to do it this year."

He added, with impeccable logic, "I think also that—if you sincerely believe you can do something—you have a better chance to accomplish it. I think that if you expect to have more success, it's a lot more likely to happen . . . And I think we are a better football team in a lot of regards, and I think for us to go into this season without the expectation to do better, would be short-changing ourselves a little bit."

This approach necessarily applies in equal measure to the coaches and the players, Infante emphasized.

Animated Infante and defensive coordinator Hank Bullough "double team" an unidentified official.

Happy over his first victory as Packers' head coach, Infante gets hearty handshake from a jubilant Shawn Patterson.

"I think we as a coaching staff have to expect more of ourselves," he affirmed. "We've gone through all the growing pains together—the getting to know one another, the organizational stages. All those things are easier now. So I think we should expect to do a better job coaching.

"I think the players have to expect to do a better job in their assignments, and in their knowledge of what they're doing, and their performance. And, overall, I think everybody should expect that we're going to be a better football team and do better things."

A card-carrying optimist, Infante concedes the high expectations begin with him.

"I just believe that we can be a solid football team," he said, simultaneously adding, "I'm still not one to predict . . . I'm not one to say how many games we can or can't win. We go into every game expecting to win—we've got a better chance of having the success that we would like to have.

"But there are still a lot of factors that separate the champions from the rest of the league. We've got to get into close games in the fourth quarter and expect to win . . . And figure out a way to win 'em. Last year, we seemed to figure out ways to lose those close ball games, and this year we've got to figure out a way to win 'em . . . And I think that will be what will separate the team that was last year from the team that is this year, that is coming up."

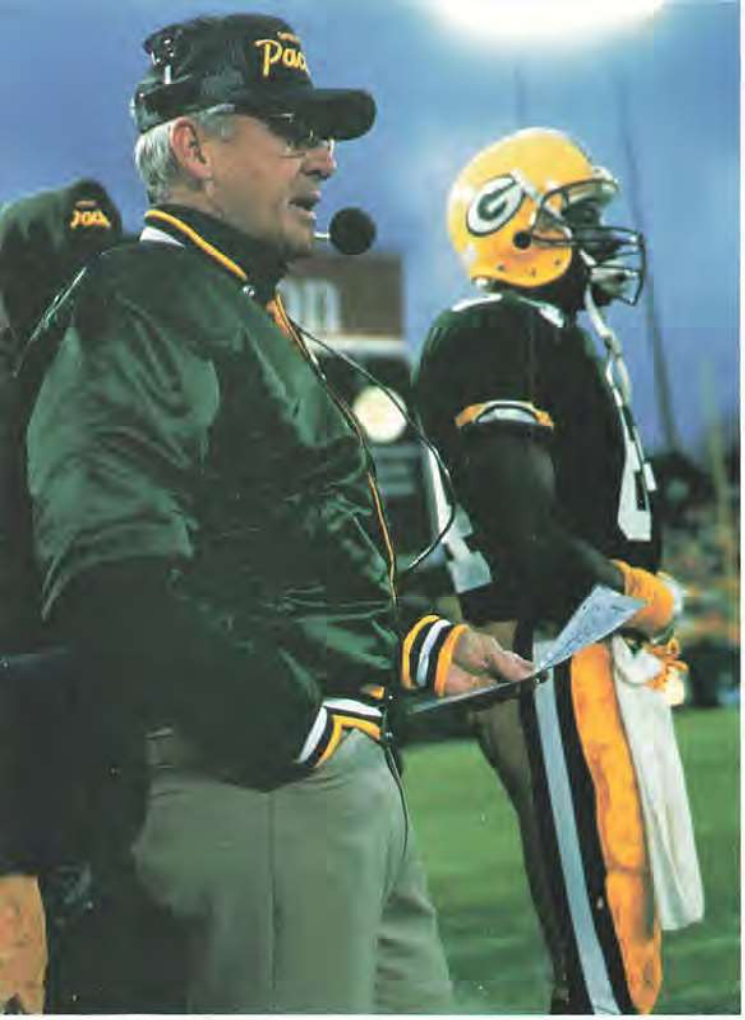
Infante's optimism, he says, is based upon "a lot of factors that should make us a better football team."

Proceeding to enumerate them, he pointed out, "The fact that we acquired 20 players in the free agent market Plan B—that all should have a chance to compete for positions on the team—should make us better . . . It will make our camp more competitive.

"The fact that we've had a solid draft—picked up some players that fit our needs and our system—also should make it a more competitive camp.

"I think there's some guys in that draft group that can make a contribution. Whether or not it's as a starter, at this point it's far too early to make those kinds of predictions.

"Certainly, if a guy like Tony Mandarich is signed by the time we go to camp, you'd have to expect him to be a contributor because of where we drafted him and what he's supposed to be. . . Some of the other players certainly have good opportunities to be competitive in making a spot on the team.



Lindy talks strategy–via telephone–with offensive aide in press box as Sterling Sharpe joins him in sideline vigil.

"The fact that our players have been around one another and our system now for a full year also should make it easier for them to perform and not to think so much on their feet, and be more reactive in their approach to the game.

"We're light years ahead of where we were last year, as far as the information we take on the field with ourselves is concerned."

The Packers' aggressive off-season foray into the Plan B market, which saw them sign more unrestricted free agents than any of their 27 NFL rivals, could be a significant factor in an artistic turnaround, Infante suggested.

"We've increased the quality of the bottom part of our football team," he said. "Increasing the quality of the bottom part of our football team is going to push the cream to the top.

"I think one of the key factors in being successful is being able to overcome injuries. And the better your depth—everybody in this business, every team in this league is going to suffer a degree of injuries—and the teams that can fight through those the best—either because they have great depth or they acquire players that can fill the roles of those who have been injured—are going to perform better on a consistent basis."

"And I think the fact that we've acquired the new talent should, if nothing else, improve our depth. And, in that alone, we should be a better football team. And I think when we make our final cuts—when we get down to 47—as I look at the board now, there are going to be some tougher decisions for us to make. There's going to be some players that are going to be cut from this football team that are good enough to play in the league. And, last year, that maybe wasn't quite the case. There were some areas where maybe we kept some players that we might have liked to have had better than in different areas . . . And I think we've solved some of those problems."

Questions remain, however, about one key area—quarterback, Infante candidly admits.

"Again we have gone through an off-season that's not ideal because we have not had a quarterback establish himself as the heir apparent to our quarterback situation . . . as our quarterback of the future," he said.

"We don't have a true incumbent quarterback—like a Bernie Kosar, a Dan Marino or a John Elway. So we have a quarterback controversy. Teams that win don't have a quarterback controversy.

"All the quarterbacks we have here are all relatively young in the league, as far as years that either have been played in it or what their backgrounds are," the Packers' field leader pointed out, "so it's not like we've got somebody that's established himself, over the years, as our number one quarterback.

"And then you add to that the problem of (Don) Majkowski's shoulder bothering him throughout the off-season to where he couldn't perform in our mini-camps and our off-season workouts, it leaves a question mark.

"We picked up a couple of young guys (third round draft choice Anthony Dilweg of Duke and free agent Doug Hudson, an ex-Kansas City Chief) who should have a chance to compete," Infante continued.

"So the quarterback situation is certainly not one that is solved. It's certainly not one that's where we can go in there and say, 'This is our starter, this is our second team quarterback, this is our third guy.' We don't have that luxury right now. I think that when we arrive, and that when we become a true contender, that situation will resolve itself—either with players we have here or with those we'll acquire as we go down through our existence.

"But as we sit here right now, I'd have to say that is not a settled position at this time."

In the process of this analysis, Infante confided, "If I have any regrets from 1988, it is that I probably should have let Blair Kiel play some."

Kiel, the former Buccaneer and Colt, was signed as a free agent in May of 1988 and did not attempt a pass in league play, spending all but the season finale on inactive status.

"Blair had an excellent training camp last year, and time kind of ran out on us," Lindy noted in reflection. "And then, once we got into the season, it's hard to get three guys ready to play. He was a guy that had a good camp, but once we got into the season, we never saw him play a down.

"Looking back, if I knew we were going to have the kind of year we had, I might have experimented a little bit more and taken a look at Blair to get a better feel for what he might be able to do in game situations for '89. But, certainly, the season is not the place to experiment. Maybe the last game or two, if you want to look at some players, but certainly not throughout the season. And, you know, maybe a time or two there later in the year, it might have been wise for me to take a look at Blair in a series or two, which I did not do . . . But that's hindsight. I don't ever worry about those types of things. You call a play and you go on. I don't worry about that. But I think we'll give Blair a good look in this training camp and see what happens. He's had a good off-season for us. He's certainly an asset to our football team and—even not playing last year—he was an asset to our football team. He was very much into what we were doing and prepared himself as though he was going to play every week. And I think he knows as much—if not more—than anybody else on our team quarterback-wise."

Infante also has been impressed by what he has seen of Hudson in the early going. Labeling the Nicholls State product "an interesting young man," Infante observed, "he's just been a very pleasant surprise. He's strong, over 6-2 and very bright."

Needless to say, the Packer coach has more than incidental interest in finding a quarterback who will "step forward and make a statement," considering the problems the Green and Gold encountered on offense in 1988, when they suffered three shutouts—two of them in succession.

"We've got to be better offensively," Infante asserted, addressing this key concern. "If we're not any better than we were last year offensively, then we're going to be wallowing around in the same position we were this past year. I fully expect us to be better. I think the players that we've acquired are going to make us better.

"We've picked up some offensive linemen that should add to our strength and depth in the offensive line. We've picked up some tight ends in the off-season that should make our tight end position more competitive. We drafted a couple of wide receivers; we drafted a running back; we've picked up a couple of running backs in the free agent market that should compete for either starting or backup roles. Our quarterbacks have been around for a year in the system.

"All of these things should make us better and, here again, going back to the word expectation, I expect this to be a considerably better offensive football team."

On the other side of the ball, the defense had been more than adequate in 1988, finishing a lofty seventh in the NFL as a whole statistically, the Packers' best ranking since 1974. And Infante is confident it can be even more effective over the '89 route.

"I think we certainly helped ourselves in some areas in the free agent market," he said. "We picked up a couple or three cornerbacks (notably Van Jakes of the Saints and Mickey Sutton of the Rams) that should certainly compete. We drafted four players in the secondary—certainly any of them should have a chance to make our team.

"We drafted two defensive linemen

A good day's work: A smiling Lindy Infante, enjoying the moment with special teams coach Howard Tippett, stows away his glasses in the final seconds of a 45-3 victory over the Patriots.

Infante, slightly more restrained than his players, joins in the excitement as the Packers score enroute to an 18-6 upset of the playoff-bound Vikings. Offensive backfield coach Willie Peete is behind Infante and defensive coordinator Hank Bullough is at far left. Jubilant players are Brian Noble (91) and Bob Nelson (79).

(Matt Brock of Oregon and Mark Hall of Southwest Louisiana) that both were fairly impressive in our early pre-season workouts. So I think that our defense—the expectation of our defense is that it has to play at least as good as it did last year and hopefully better. And last year they played very solid. They ended up ranked fairly high in some categories; we've got to expect that kind of performance out of them again.

"And, hopefully," Infante appended, "if our offense plays better, it will make our defense an even better unit because they won't be thrust out there in some of the situations that our offense put 'em out there in last year. So, hopefully, it will be even better."

From an overall standpoint, the Packer coach detects a burgeoning enthusiasm among his players.

"I think one thing that will bring on a sense of enthusiasm is competition," he observed. "I think last year everybody was feeling their way around to a degree, for a time, trying to figure out what we were trying to get done. I think we have figured that out. I think that now that everybody understands that we are not going to maintain a status quo position—we're going to move forward and we're always going to be searching for better players. And, with the acquisition of the new talent—either draft-wise or free agent-wise in the off-season—that we certainly made a statement that we've made a commitment here to win and we're going to do whatever it takes to win. And I think the players sense that and they feel good about that. I think they'd like to be on a team that's made a commitment to winning, and I think they sense that and feel that, which maybe creates some enthusiasm. I think the fact that they know it's going to be very competitive has created some enthusiasm. And I think they feel we're a better football team because of the acquisition of talent, and I think that creates some enthusiasm."

The element of accelerated competition has triggered another benefit, Infante says.

"I think our players are in better condition than they were a year ago at this time," he noted, confiding, "There are a lot of guys who are worried about their jobs.

"We don't have a superstar on this football team," Lindy continued, "but we can do it as a football team. There's going to be a new complexion on this football team. We have some new faces and if some of them make our team, then we're going to be a better football team.

"We're going to be more solid, more sound and, hopefully, it will be a more productive year in the win column."

If it is, it could be a happy anniversary for Infante, who has begun his 25th year in coaching, a milestone which had been somewhat lost in the shuffle as far as he is concerned.

"I really hadn't thought about it, quite frankly," he said, adding, "It sure would be nice for my 25th year to have the same kind of success that my first year had. Because my first year in coaching was in high school as an assistant coach down in Miami, Florida, and we went 12-and-0 and won the state and national championships. We won every game and were voted the national champions by some survey.

"But I really hadn't thought about it being my 25th year. And I don't know if it means a thing. . . If we have good players and we play good, we'll win, and if we coach hard, coach those guys right, we have a better chance . . . That's really all it means.

"But," he chuckled, ever quick to find humor in a situation, "it makes me feel a little bit older, now that you mention it."

The U.F.A.* FACTOR

* UNRESTRICTED FREE AGENTS

by Jim Egle
Green Bay Press Gazette

Ex-Seahawk Blair Bush, a starter for Cincinnati and Seattle for the past 11 seasons, surveys practice field scene with quarterback Blair Kiel.

When the original "Plan B" was unveiled at the National Football League meetings last October, the Green Bay Packers weren't interested. The plan, which would grant free agency to any player not protected by his team, allowed teams to protect 41 players, or almost the entire active roster of 47.

"We were very blase about it," said Tom Braatz, the Packers' director of football operations.

But when the number of protected players was reduced to 37, Braatz and other members of Packers management reconsidered and decided to aggressively pursue players in the new market.

Aggressive is perhaps an understatement. When the signing period for unprotected free agents ended April 1, the Packers had signed 20 players, more than any team in the NFL.

According to Braatz, the Packers spent about $855,000 for those 20 players. They reportedly spent almost $800,000 on signing bonuses; the rest was for expenses for physicals and tryouts. (Braatz said the salaries earned by the signed players should almost equal the players they would replace, so salary figures are not included in the cost).

Braatz and Coach Lindy Infante both believe the signings will strengthen a team that finished 4-12 in 1988.

"We have much more competition on this football team job-wise than we did a year ago," said Braatz. "You get 20 veterans in here who have made somebody's football team, and some of them have been long-time starters. There's going to be some excellent competition at some positions."

Said Infante: "It should make us better, at least minutely better if not considerably better."

Before the UFA signing period began February 1, Braatz and Infante met with outgoing Packers' President Robert Parins. They told Parins that it would probably cost $1 million to compete in the market. Parins gave his blessing to the project.

"We didn't have a number in mind as to how many we would be able to sign," Braatz said. "We just didn't know what the market would bear."

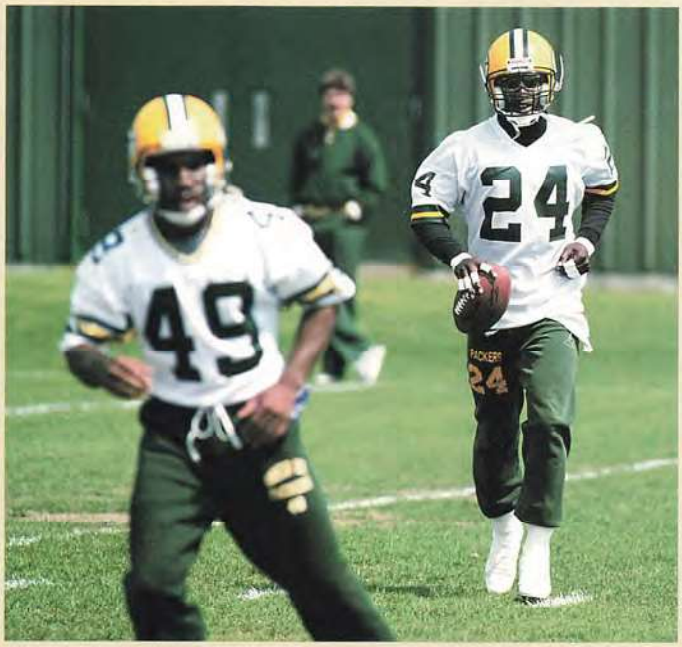
Packers' scouts and assistant coaches were each assigned two teams to evaluate. Unprotected players were placed in three categories: possible starter, a player who could improve the team's depth, or a player who could come to camp and maybe challenge for a job. No players were rated as certain starters.

Braatz said the Packers signed five players who have a good chance to start for Green Bay: fullback Michael Haddix (Philadelphia), center Blair Bush (Seattle), guard Bill Ard (New York Giants), cornerback Van Jakes (New Orleans) and tight end John Spagnola (Seattle). Thirteen players were rated as likely improving the Packers' bench strength and two were considered camp players.

The position where the Packers

Billy Ard (67), a starter for the Giants in Super Bowl XXI at guard, works against Thomas Flesher in practice.

Former Ram Mickey Sutton (49) and ex-Saint Van Jakes (24) are leading challengers for berths in the secondary.



received the most help from signings was at cornerback, according to Braatz. The Packers' starting cornerbacks last season, Dave Brown and Mark Lee, are age 36 and 31, respectively. The reserves on the roster were Ron Pitts, who was waived by Buffalo last fall, and Norman Jefferson, who suffered a serious knee injury last September and whose status is still uncertain.

Jakes started 25 of 28 games for the Saints in the last two seasons. He is considered a smart, tough veteran.

"We thought he was the best corner in that market," said Braatz. "And he's not old (28)."

The Packers also added depth at cornerback by signing Mickey Sutton, who played mostly nickel back for the Los Angeles Rams during the past three seasons. Sutton had a 46-yard punt return against the Packers last September 4th. He might be used as a kick returner and has played well on coverage teams.

Another area the Packers upgraded was offensive line. In addition to Bush and Ard, the Packers also signed New York Giants tackle Mike Ariey and New Orleans center James Campen.

Braatz said Bush may have the best opportunity of the 20 signed free agents to start. He has started for Cincinnati and Seattle, perennial playoff teams, for the last 11 years.

Ard, 30, started at left guard for the Giants' Super Bowl championship team in 1986 and was a Pro Bowl alternate in 1987.

Campen so impressed offensive line coach Charlie Davis at minicamp that Davis suggested Campen, Bush and incumbent Mark Cannon would have a three-way battle for the center job. And although Ariey didn't play in a regular-season game in two years for the Giants, New York management reportedly considered protecting him.

The Packers signed three tight ends and four running backs to shore up weaknesses at those areas.

Spagnola, a Pro Bowl alternate for Philadelphia in 1984 and '85, caught just five passes as a backup last season. Still, he is expected to challenge Ed West for the starter's spot.

"We signed him as the receiving type tight end," said Braatz. "We'll play him in passing type situations and he'll have a chance to start.

"He's not the blocker Ed West is, but he's a better receiver than Ed West is."

Tight ends Brent Novoselsky (Chicago) and Gary Wilkins (Atlanta) also signed with the Packers.

Haddix was the eighth player selected in the 1983 draft, generally considered to be the best of the decade. He did not prove to be an outstanding ball-carrying halfback, but found a home at fullback in Philadelphia.

"His weak points are his pure change of direction and long-ball threat," said Braatz. "But if you want to put (Brent) Fullwood at tailback and have someone up front who will open a hole, Haddix might fit that bill."

Former Minnesota halfback Darryl Harris is being counted on to improve the Packers' kickoff returns. He and former Tampa Bay Buccaneer Bobby Howard will also get shots at the halfback spot, which Infante relies on for pass-receiving skills and to carry the ball. Another Tampa Bay running back, Jeff Smith, can play both fullback and halfback and was very productive for the Buccaneers in limited playing time last year.

Of course, the Packers didn't get everything they wanted from the unprotected free agent market. Quarterbacks and defensive end, the Packers' most pressing needs, were not among the positions aided by unprotected free agency. Green Bay also suffered disappointments at wide receiver and kicker.

The Packers aggressively pursued former Indianapolis quarterback Gary Hogeboom. But he signed with Phoenix although the Packers offered a similar deal.

"There was only one quarterback in the unprotected thing, Gary Hogeboom, who had a chance to start here," said Braatz. "We weren't interested in improving our backup situation or taking a guy to camp (at quarterback).

Likewise, the pickings at defensive end were very slim. The Packers rated Cleveland's Carl Hairston as the top available defensive end, but the 36-year-old elected to remain with the Browns. The Packers' top prospect among young defensive linemen, Fred Stokes of the Rams, signed with Washington after narrowing his choices to the Redskins and the Packers.

Perhaps the area where the Packers had the best chance to help themselves, and didn't, was at wide receiver. Green Bay signed one wide receiver, Detroit's Carl Bland, but missed out on the top three receivers on their board–Dallas' Mike Sherrard, Cleveland's Clarence Weathers and San Francisco's Mike Wilson.

Sherrard, one of the most heavily pursued free agents, signed with San Francisco. Weathers went to the Colts, Wilson stayed with the 49ers.

"We felt (Sherrard) could either be the plum or the prune of this whole thing," said Braatz. "He was a number one draft choice a few years ago (1987) who had great hands and great speed and was a great kid to be around. He passed our physical. We pursued him very hard."

Kicking was an obvious weak link for the Packers last year. They wanted to get a reliable, veteran kicker who could keep the job for 2-3 years.

Green Bay's first choice was Matt Bahr of Cleveland. The Packers and Bahr negotiated for 10 days, but Bahr decided to stay with the Browns. Cincinnati's Jim Breech was the Packers' second choice, but he, too, elected to stay put.

The Packers negotiated with other kickers, including former Cleveland kicker Jeff Jaeger (who signed with the Raiders) before settling on Kirk Roach of Buffalo. A bare-footed kicker, Roach was the highest-rated kicker on the Packers' draft board in 1988. He was picked by Buffalo in the fifth round, but missed the entire season after undergoing surgery to repair a hernia in May.

Some areas that weren't considered to be in dire need of help were augmented by signings.

Maury Buford, who punted for the Bears during their Super Bowl championship season of 1986, signed with Green Bay. He punted for the New York Giants last season after Sean Landeta was sidelined in Week 1 by a back injury, but became expendable upon Landeta's return to health. Buford should challenge incumbent Don Bracken.

Two nose tackles, Toby Williams of New England and Doug Bartlett of Philadelphia, left their teams to join the Packers. Williams was the Patriots' starting nose tackle in 1986 and 1987, but had a lengthy hold out last season and lost his job to rookie Tim Goad.

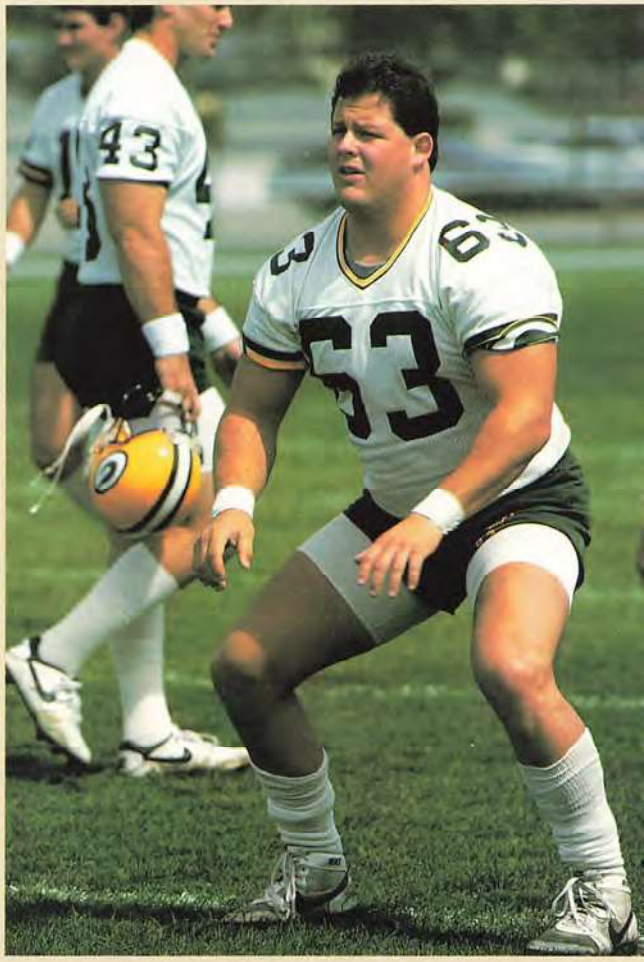
Linebacking is perhaps the Packers' strongest area, but the Packers signed two more–Todd Howard of Kansas City and Kurt Crain of Houston. Howard played inside linebacker for the Chiefs, but the Packers will try him outside. Braatz has compared Crain to Brian Noble in his ability to stuff the run.

How many of the signees will make the team? Braatz said he expects about half, or 10, to make the 47-man roster in September.

"We were interested in helping this football team right now," said Braatz. "We think this is a better way to do it than the draft.

"I'm not comparing these people to players picked in the first, second and third rounds of the draft. I'm saying they're better than the players picked from the fourth round on down."

"We were in the market because we won four games last year, five the year before, four the year before that. Hopefully we won't have to sign 20 again next year. If this team progresses and we play better, we won't sign 20 again."



Unheralded James Campen, an ex-Saint, has been a pleasant surprise at center.

Ex-Eagle John Spagnola, a skilled receiver, adds a new dimension to tight end.

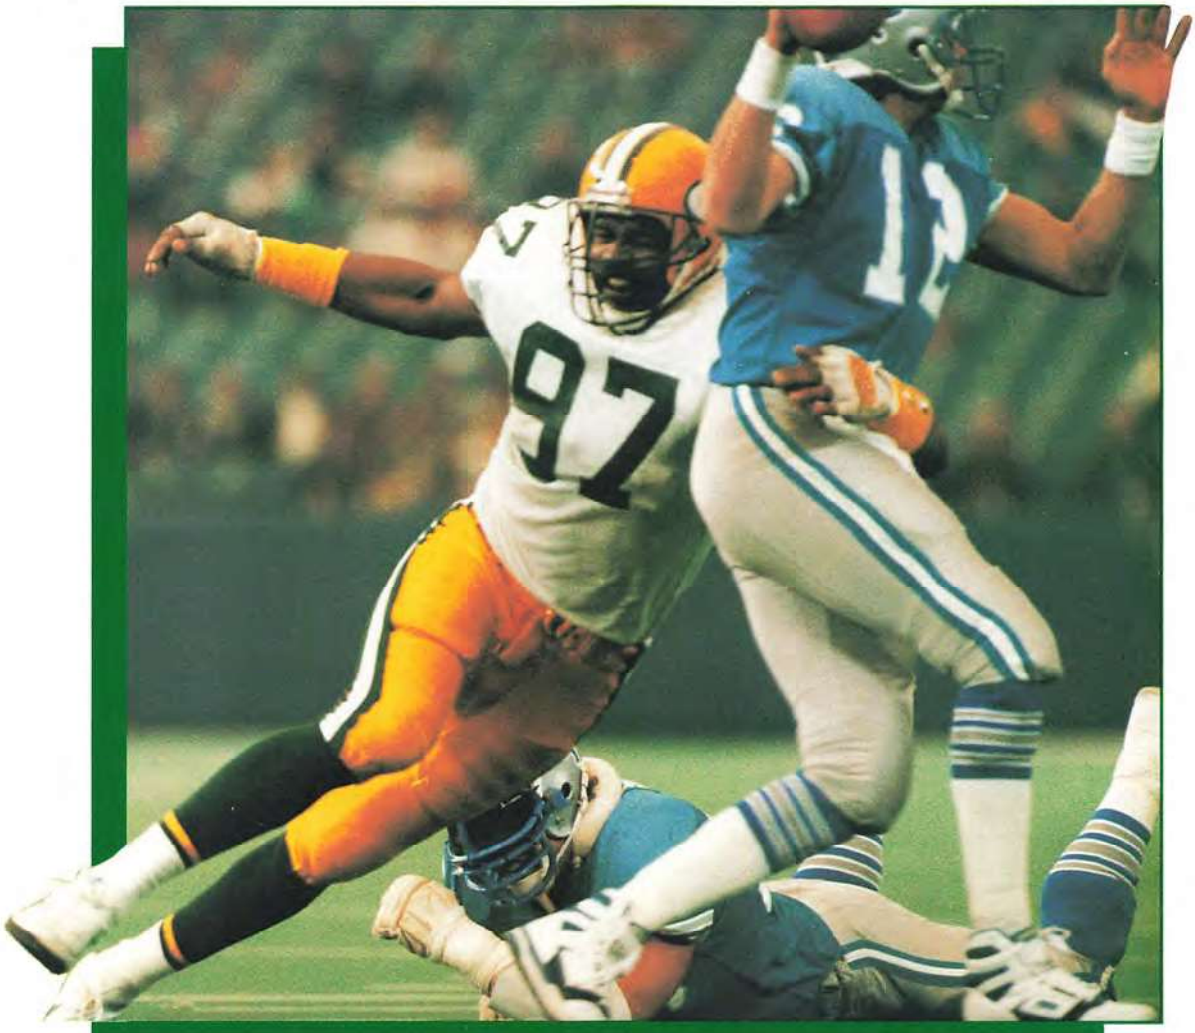
Tim Harris, who ranked among NFL sack leaders with 13 1/2, adds Lions' QB Rusty Hilger to his collection.



TIM TERRIFIC

Harris Is Green Bay's Shooting Star

by Tom Oates
Wisconsin State Journal

Tim Harris was standing tall in the Pontiac Silverdome last December, emptying the contents of two imaginary six-shooters into still another prone quarterback.

The Green Bay Packers' shooting star had struck again.

After this particular quarterback sack, however, the ringing in Harris' ears wasn't cheering. As the Packers' pass-rushing specialist towered over the Detroit Lions' Rusty Hilger and filled him with imaginary lead, Lions players and fans alike showed their displeasure. Back in Wisconsin, fans watching on the tube wondered if Harris wasn't overdoing it a bit considering the Packers were well on their way to a 30-14 defeat.

Harris?

He was just having fun.

"It's just something I like to do," said the man who has brought back the sack to the Pack. "When I make a sack and shoot my guns, a lot of guys on the team may get fired up. It fires me up, too."

Getting fired up is a big part of the game plan for Harris, an outside linebacker with a spontaneous, volatile character. He shoots first and answers questions later.

"I really don't care what the outside people say about it," Harris said of his Sundance Kid routine, "because (Coach) Lindy Infante told me he doesn't mind whether I shoot my guns or anything. The only person I'm worried about is him. If he says it's OK with him, then it's OK with me.

"Some people might call it hot-dogging. I call it just me celebrating—I finally got to the quarterback and I'm having a good time and I'm shooting my guns telling him I'm going to come sack him again. Football is played on emotions."

That's why, when Harris dropped Hilger, it didn't matter to him what the score was. Indeed, not only did Harris celebrate despite the score, he celebrated in part because of the score. His teammates needed a lift and Harris considers it his job to give them one, whether it's charging them emotionally with his big plays or keeping them loose with his constant chatter.

"We needed something," said the loquacious outside linebacker. "I'm playing defense and no matter what the score is I'm still out there playing as hard as I can. It doesn't matter if you're winning or losing. We look at it like this: We're still getting in ours. We're still doing our job. We're trying our best to do our job."

After that Detroit game, Infante attempted to cushion any criticism of Harris, saying he didn't detect any behavior that was out of line and adding that he wished all of the Packers played with Harris' intensity.

Infante understands that you can't take Harris' post-sack shootout away from him any more than you can restrict the finger-pointing and bantering with opponents on the way back to the huddle or the gesticulating to get the crowd into the game. Those things are as much a part of Harris' game as knifing past a tackle to get to a quarterback or cracking a ballcarrier in the open field.

You can't have one without the other.

"If somebody tells me I can't do it anymore—'Stop your emotions'—I might as well not play football," Harris said. "Because I'm going to express myself when I'm happy or express myself when I'm sad or upset or anything else. I never can hold something back on myself. I'm not that type of person. I need to play with emotions, I need to loud talk and have a good time. As long as I do that I can be out there enjoying myself.

"If other people see it as hot-doggish, I just think they're seeing it from a wrong point of view. I feel that we're here as a team. We only won four games last year and we need some kind of excitement going on. We just can't sit around and duck our heads. We need that kind of excitement around here to get everybody going. I'm going to keep on doing that no matter what."

That's good news to the Packers. If Harris keeps gunning down quarterbacks in broad daylight, that means he's getting to them. And getting to them is what the Packers pay him to do.

The 6-foot-5, 250-pound Harris, who is built along the lines of NFL Hall of Famer Ted Hendricks, has led Green Bay in sacks in each of his three seasons with the team. During that time, he has been the only consistent pass rusher on the Packers' defense.

A fourth-round draft pick out of Memphis State in 1986, Harris didn't become a starter until the seventh game of his rookie season. He collected one quarterback sack among his 10 unassisted tackles in his debut against Cleveland, and ended the season with 7 l/2 sacks and team rookie of the year honors. In 1987, Harris added seven sacks and established himself as the Packers' big-play man.

After two learning seasons, Harris burst into the NFL's elite last fall, earning credit for 13 1/2 sacks to rank fifth in the league. He also tied an NFL record for most safeties in a season, nailing Minnesota's Wade Wilson twice—in separate games. Harris finished second on the team in tackles behind only Mark Murphy, helping the defense rank seventh in the NFL in yardage allowed, its highest finish since l974.

"He's right on the edge of making a statement in the league and being a Pro Bowler," Infante said. "I think he came close last year. I would hope he'd have the kind of season in '89 that would let him get the recognition that he deserves."

Earth to Lindy: Harris is planning just that.

"I guess as the years have gone on more responsibilities have come my way," Harris said. "Now, each game we go into, I just try to make something happen all the time, try to make big plays happen because I like hearing my name over the intercom."

The last part was uttered with a laugh. Harris makes big plays because he wants to help the Packers win, he wants a bigger contract and he wants to make the Pro Bowl.

"Each year, my main thing was to try and lead the team in sacks," he said. "But after you've led the team in sacks for two years, the next thing you know I was trying to rate up high in the NFL in sacks. So last year I did that. I was fifth in the NFL in sacks. That was a pretty big accomplishment.

"So now you just reach for No. 1. You can't be fifth or less now, you've got to be fifth or above now. So I'm just trying to improve myself and do better things to try and get up there to No. 1."

Tim, a doting father, and wife Barbara, share a merry-go-round ride with their daughter, Marissa.

How eager is Harris to improve? Very eager. He knows that even after three seasons of constant improvement he hasn't satisfied all of his critics. Like himself.

"I'm my hardest judge," he said. "If someone says that I played a pretty good game, they probably didn't see that I missed two sacks or that I missed a couple of tackles... A lot of people said last year I had a good season, but to me it was OK. It was nothing to write home about because I knew I could have done a lot better. I missed a lot of sacks, I missed a lot of tackles and maybe they ran a couple of reverse plays around me. There's a lot more improvement that I see that needs to be done, especially in my pass coverages and things like that."

But there are other judges who concern Harris. Like his peers. Harris was stung last season when he didn't make the Pro Bowl, which is selected by a vote of the players.

"It was very disappointing because I was really trying my hardest to make it this past year," Harris said. "But I guess I slipped up a couple of times and just wasn't in the right place at the right time or something like that. It was nothing that really set me back. I just kept my head and kept looking forward and kept going. It just prepares me for next year, makes me a little bit hungrier and makes my eyes a little bit more red and just play extra hard to make sure I make it next year."

Of course, Harris did not go without recognition last season. He made the all-Madden team.

Harris hadn't even given much thought to the all-Madden team, a somewhat tongue-in-cheek all-star team selected by former NFL coach and current CBS announcer John Madden. Unlike the Pro Bowl, the all-Madden team consists of real football players, not popularity-contest winners. It is for guys who like to hit somebody, get their uniform dirty, talk a little trash, then line up and do it all over again. It's not for guys with inflated egos and overblown reputations.

It's for guys like Harris.

"It was a very satisfying thing," Harris said. "I didn't even know I made it until the time it came on TV. I was sitting around laughing with Ken Stills and a few other guys and they showed three other guys and we said, 'Well, who's going to be the fourth linebacker?' Next thing you know they showed my face up there. We were sitting there drinking a couple of beers and we got so excited and we were screaming so loud that we didn't get a chance to hear what he said about me.

"I was excited about it. To me that was a big accomplishment playing professional football that somebody finally noticed me being here with the Packers. Even though we aren't a winning team, I finally got noticed. That was a good thing."

The all-Madden selection only reaffirmed what Harris' teammates have understood for three seasons: He is an impact football player, someone who consistently makes the kind of big plays a team needs to win games.

"I'm not the type of player that looks around and waits for something to happen," Harris said. "I'm trying to be the first person to make it happen."

Harris wants to make it happen in Green Bay. He bought a house and moved his family—wife Barbara and 1-year-old daughter Marissa—from Memphis to Green Bay in the off-season. He appreciates that the Packers drafted him when other teams passed him by. He doesn't mind the fishbowl atmosphere a black pro football player faces in Green Bay.

"You can look back at all those other teams now and say they were wrong," Harris said. "I'm just glad Green Bay gave me a chance. I'm just happy to be here."

He wants to play many more years in a Packers uniform. But even when Harris becomes a savvy old veteran, don't ever expect him to change his ways from the "wild and crazy" young outside linebacker he is today.

"I'll just be a crazy old outside linebacker," Harris said. "I'll still be the same guy, I'll just be a little older. I don't think anything's going to tone me down. Nothing's going to ever cool me out to where I'll be that wise old linebacker where I'm real quiet and just do my job and get back up because that's not me. I need some excitement.

"I'm just a fun-loving guy. I like to have a good time. I have all my priorities in order and everything. I take care of business first. But I like to have a good time. And if I'm not having a good time, if I'm bored or upset, I'm not a fun person to be around. But 98 percent of the time I'm in a good mood."

Especially when he's shooting his guns.

MAJIK'S MOMENT?

by Rob Schultz

Majkowski Still Confident He'll Prevail

Tom Braatz leaned against a drinking fountain in the Green Bay Packer locker room as he took a break during the 1987 draft. He looked at the clock, noticed it was nearing midnight and yawned.

Only a few reporters were left covering the draft and one of them asked Braatz what his strategy was going to be for the Packers' final three picks.

"We have to find a quarterback," said Braatz.

He looked up at the ceiling as if to pray. "What a terrible time to try to find a quarterback," he added.

The Packers' executive vice president in charge of football operations went back to the draft room and selected Virginia quarterback Don Majkowski in the 10th round. Few, if any, reporters had heard of him. A part-time player who ran the option offense his senior year, Majkowski hadn't even been invited to the NFL Scouting Combine in Indianapolis. Upon his selection, one wag claimed that Majkowski would stick around for just a few weeks of training camp and then disappear onto the waiver list.

That was the end of the discussion concerning Majkowski that late April night more than two years ago. His selection certainly didn't raise any eyebrows. All the reporters did was rub their eyes.

Donald Vincent Majkowski was a true sleeper if ever there was one.

In two years, Majkowski has awakened the Packer offense with his brash athletic ability and strong leadership traits. He opened the eyes of his teammates when he ended his rookie season as the starting quarterback. In his second year, Majkowski dusted off Mr. Sand Man and the dreaded sophomore slump by continuing to improve and starting 9 of the team's final 11 games.

Through it all, Majkowski has heard the cheers; as much from his teammates as his fans. The most motivational player on the team since Lynn Dickey retired, there are few more popular among the Packers than Majkowski.

Majkowski remembers the night he was drafted. He remembers the pain of watching 14 quarterbacks being selected ahead of him. He remembers the shoulder separation he suffered his senior year at Virginia that killed his chances to impress NFL scouts. And he remembers that each time he readied himself to take the next big step in his football career, an untimely injury had knocked him off his feet.

"When I was finally drafted, all I could think of was getting the chance to get to an NFL camp. Any camp," said Majkowski. "It didn't matter to me which round I was drafted. I just couldn't wait to come in and prove myself."

It didn't take long for the Packers to learn they had drafted somebody special. Majkowski caught on to the system quickly. And he had that great, confident attitude.

"That's the attitude I've kept all these years. It's an attitude where Behind protectors Ken Ruettgers (75) and Brent Fullwood (21), Don Majkowski scans scene for open receiver against Buffalo Bills.

Majkowski soberly ponders the situation during a sideline "breather".

I'm very hungry to succeed because nothing was ever handed to me on a silver platter," said Majkowski. "I've had to work hard to get where I am today."

On the field, that confident attitude makes the 25-year-old Majkowski appear cocky, brash. But off the field, he tries hard to dispel that image. He's a tough interview for reporters and thinks long and hard before speaking because he doesn't want anything misconstrued as controversial.

"I don't want people to think I'm arrogant, conceited or stuck up. I want to convey a confidence that I call a controlled cockiness," Majkowski said.

"I think you have to know you're good in order to succeed," he added. "You have to let others know you believe in yourself before others have confidence in you. But you have to do it the right way."

Majkowski learned that at a young age. He grew up in the suburbs of Buffalo and quickly became well-versed in a myriad of activities. Guided by his father, a great amateur speed skater, Majkowski learned his father's sport and also played hockey, basketball, track and baseball as well as football through his high school years.

In his spare time, he loved to play ping pong and bowl. And when he wasn't involved in sports, he played guitar and sang in a band called "Joker." Or he spent time alone painting.

Even today, Majkowski still loves to compete in most of those sports. He still sings and paints, too.

Last fall, for instance, he cut a 45 rpm record for the NFL talent contest. He played guitar and sang "Every Rose Has A Thorn." Majkowski didn't make the NFL's final five–all of whom performed live prior to last January's Super Bowl–but he was informed he was very close to making it.

"I got robbed," Majkowski said, throwing his controlled cockiness aside for the moment. "I thought the contestants were pretty weak. Two guys were pretty good. But the other guys were weak."

Still, Majkowski's record got some air time on several Wisconsin radio stations and he raised $1,700 for Cystic Fibrosis with it. "I didn't win the talent contest, but I think, overall, it was a winner," he said.

This spring, Majkowski painted a self-action shot. In Buffalo years ago, he gained some good reviews for some of his oil paintings that hung in the Albright-Knox Gallery. The self-action shot, however, was done in acrylics. Once again, Majkowski proves his versatility.

"It's abstract," he said of his latest artistic venture, which was painted in green and gold on a huge canvas. "It's a different style. It's a Leroy Neimann take off, I guess."

Majkowski credits his father for his talent in so many different avenues. "He got me involved in a lot of stuff. He was a tremendous guide," Majkowski said.

In track, Majkowski was Depew High School's top hurdler and high jumper. In baseball, he was an all-Erie County pitcher and shortstop. And he was talented enough in basketball to listen to scholarship offers from several colleges.

But football was his first love. Unfortunately, Majkowski, in his own words, was just a "small, skinny kid" in high school and didn't draw much interest from scouts. He was an all-district defensive back as a junior, but he broke a bone in his passing hand right after he finally earned the right to start at quarterback as a senior. College recruiters forgot about him. It was akin to becoming a 10th-round draft choice.

As Majkowski decided what path he would take next, he learned a lesson that would pay off years later when he turned professional.

"I was confident I could succeed. I just had to be patient," he said.

Majkowski attended a junior college for a year, developed his throwing motion, gained more confidence and the scouts suddenly remembered him again. Majkowski chose Virginia over a host of other schools partly because of its academics.

He continued to blossom with the Cavaliers, became the school's all-time leading passer and seemed destined to be a low-round draft choice until the shoulder separation put him on the bench for much of his senior year.

"It was horrible and it certainly knocked me down in the draft, but in a way it was good because I had grown accustomed to coming from nowhere and proving myself," said Majkowski.

Majkowski proves himself by going out on the field and just doing what he feels is natural. It doesn't matter if it's throwing the bomb or running 15 yards for a first down. "You just have to go out there thinking you're good and the confidence you gain helps you overcome a lot," he said.

Majkowski admits he still has a great deal to learn. He also is thankful to have coach Lindy Infante–a quarterback's coach–as his mentor. In just one season, Majkowski said Infante taught him volumes. Infante even taught him how to play hurt.

Majkowski, one of the most talented runners among NFL quarterbacks, takes off with ex-Packer Ezra Johnson of the Colts in pursuit.

During a game at Minnesota last year, Majkowski came off the field with a huge bump on his left arm. He ran over to Infante and showed it to him. Infante offered no sympathy.

"That's a hematoma," Infante shrugged.

Later in the game, Majkowski received a deep cut on his arm. Once again he showed Infante.

"That's a contusion," Infante said, barely glancing at the wound and quickly turning his attention back to the game.

Majkowski looks back now and is equally as unsympathetic about his past injuries. And he thanked Infante for the lesson in medical terminology.

It's all in the proving process.

As he enters his third year, Majkowski finds himself in the continuing battle to prove himself. The Packers will bring in a bevy of qualified quarterbacks this summer and only three spots are available. To make matters worse, Majkowski spent the off-season nursing a shoulder injury that even Infante can't ignore.

Majkowski, however, remains undaunted. "I love football," he says. "I love the opportunity I've been given. I want to perform as well as I can while I'm here because it's not going to last forever. I think I can achieve a lot of things yet. I'm young and my best football is still ahead of me."

If not, he can always fall back on his singing career. That thought brought a laugh from both Majkowski and Infante, who heard his quarterback's singing voice on the radio more than a few times over the winter.

"He's better off sticking to football," Infante quipped.

You can bet Majkowski will make the right choice and do the right things. That, after all, has been his trademark.

Last fall, Majkowski re-negotiated a new contract with the Packers. Once one of the lowest paid players, he came out of the negotiations smelling like that rose he sang about. Braatz smiled about those contract negotiations.

"He could have signed a new deal during the off-season but they chose to gamble and wait to see how he did during the season," Braatz said last fall.

If nothing happened, then Majkowski's bargaining position would have been low. But he regained his starting position and he reaped the benefits because of it.

"He chose to throw the dice and gamble, which is a lot like his personality on the field," Braatz said at the time. "It turned out to be a good move."

No better, however, than the one Braatz made during the 10th round on that sleepy draft night in 1987.

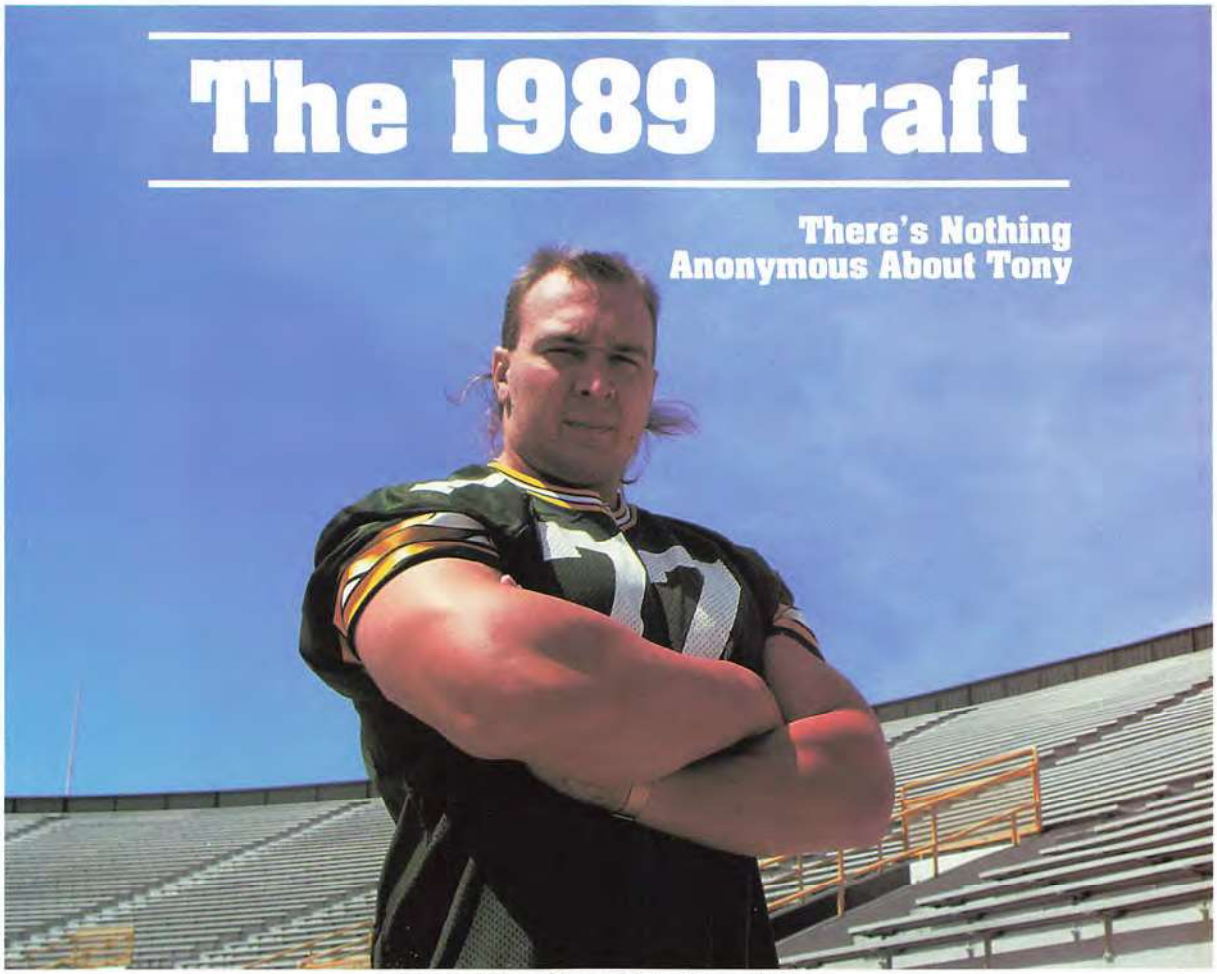
The 1989 Draft

There's Nothing Anonymous About Tony



Massive Tony Mandarich, fills out his size 58 jersey–matching largest issue in Packer history– as he visits Lambeau Field on draft day.

Traditionally, and invariably, the offensive lineman has labored in anonymous obscurity.

But there are exceptions to all rules. Notably, in 1989, one Tony Mandarich.

For perhaps the first time since the National Football League instituted the system in 1936, when Franklin Delano Roosevelt was beginning the second of a record four terms as President, one who toils in the trenches has become the most celebrated athlete to be tapped in a draft.

The Michigan State colossus, both the Packers' first pick and the second player chosen in what is formally known as the NFL's annual selection meeting, easily has attracted more attention from the media than the first player drafted, quarterback Troy Aikman of UCLA.

By light years, in point of fact.

To suggest that Tony has become larger than life, however, might verge upon exaggeration, considering the Canadian- born Mandarich is a 6-foot-5, 315-pound monolith.

But, even before he was drafted, the outspoken ex-Spartan was making headlines across the nation almost daily, a prerogative customarily reserved to those who play the glamour positions—quarterback, wide receiver and running back.

Heralded by some as the most dominant offensive lineman ever to come out of the college ranks, he long since has been on the cover of Sports Illustrated (as "The Incredible Bulk") as well as cable television's "Roy Firestone Show" and the "David Letterman Show"—none of which, it should be noted, had given Aikman the proverbial tumble during the same span.

All of this largely stems from the fact that Mandarich not only welcomes but studiously courts, such exposure via his flamboyant life style—in company with comments clearly designed to be outrageous, such as one he addressed to the media before the draft in itemizing his assets.

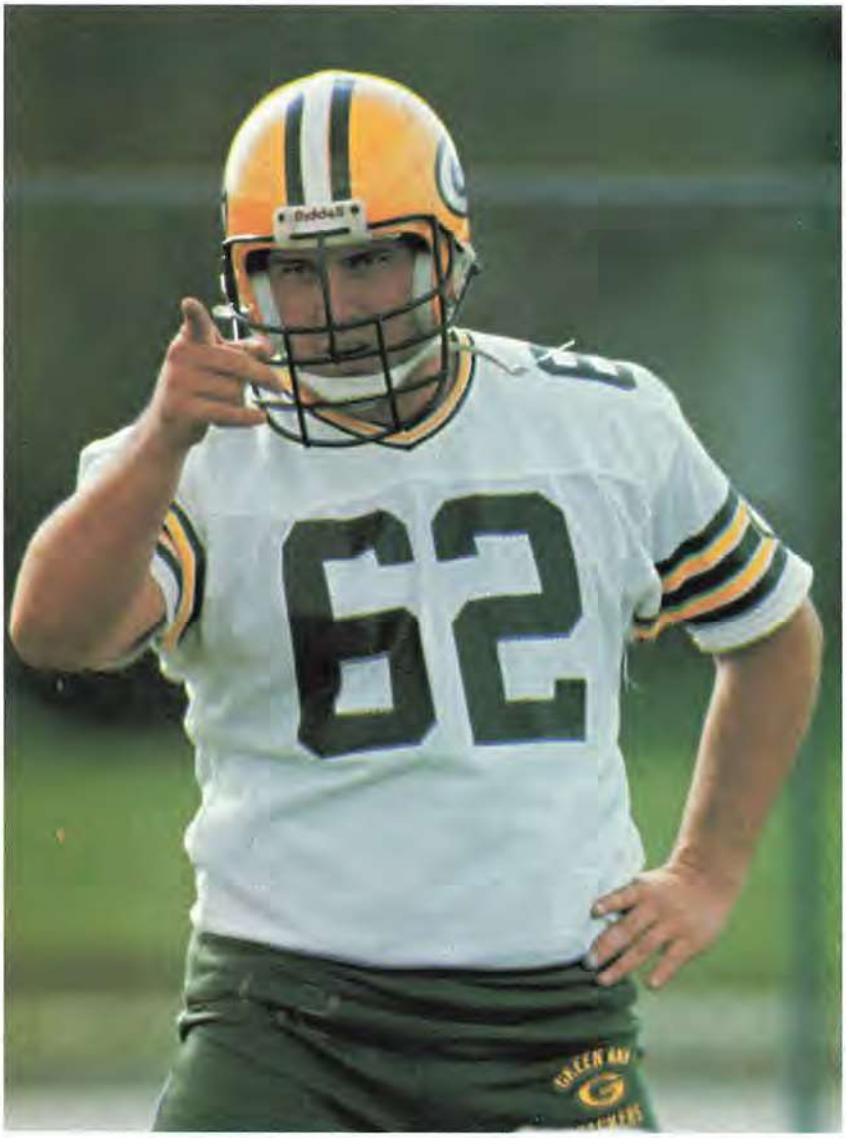
"I'm strong, I'm smart and I like putting people on their rear ends," he asserted, succinctly summing up his talents and approach. "What else is there?"

In the same context, Mandarich openly admits he has deliberately accelerated the publicity process with a somewhat cynical modus operandi—"giving people what they want to hear." Acknowledging he has no objection to being something of an anti-hero, he says, "I think people need guys like me to point a finger at."

Tony first began to capture the national spotlight with the workout he performed for members of pro football's scouting fraternity, who were awed by the physical feats they witnessed during an eye-opening session on Michigan State's East Lansing, MI, campus in February.

One of them, after watching the mountainous tackle bench press 225 pounds 39 times in succession, run the 40-yard dash in 4.65 seconds and launch a 10-foot, 3-inch standing broad jump, was heard to proclaim, "They'll be talking about that workout for twenty years."

At about the same time, a spate of stories began to surface concerning Tony's somewhat bizarre training regimen—exhausting, 2 1/2-hour weightlifting workouts to the blaring accompaniment of "Guns and Roses," in which he "lifts" to the point of regurgitation—and his highly unconventional diet, one which finds him consuming seven meals and 11,000 to 15,000 calories per day—ordinarily sufficient to nourish four average adults in any 24-hour span.



Matt Brock, a third round selection from Oregon, should spike the Packers pass rush.

In the wake of this considerable hype, the Packers made him their initial selection in the draft April 23 and, upon his arrival in Green Bay for the customary news conference, the subject of money inevitably arose.

Obviously a young man of candor, Mandarich made headlines anew in outlining his contractual demands which—if met—would make him the highest paid offensive lineman in National Football League history.

The coup de grace, however, was still to come. Mandarich, it shortly developed, was willing to put his pro football career on hold in order to make his debut in a new arena—the squared circle of the boxing ring—against none other than the reigning heavyweight champion of the world, Mike Tyson. If, that is, the price was right ($10 million, to be precise). It wasn't.

Meanwhile, Tom Braatz, the Packers' unflappable executive vice president of football operations, was conducting low profile negotiations with Tony's agent, Vern Sharbaugh, in an attempt to reach an agreement in good time.

The definitive chapter in this scenario thus, was still to be written as the '89 Packer Yearbook went to press.

Overall, the Packers emerged from this year's draft with impeccable balance from a personnel standpoint. With Braatz and Head Coach Lindy Infante supervising the two-day process, Green Bay selected six offensive players, six defensive players and two specialists.

This harvest, in part the product of two draft day trades, was enhanced by a transaction which brought the Packers the Cleveland Browns' No. 1 draft choice in 1990.

"Probably the key to the draft—the thing that made it a good draft—if there was something that pushed it over the edge," Infante was to declare, "was the acquisition of the number one draft choice."

He went on to explain: "The time that we came up in the second round to choose, we felt the first round pick was far away more important than the players that we were looking at, at that particular time of the draft. So we felt like, regardless of when we spend that choice, it will be a player that might be a bigger impact player than anything we would have gotten in that high second round pick."

That exchange with the Browns, which saw the Packers deal their second and fifth round choices in this year's draft to Cleveland for the Browns' third and fifth (plus the No. 1 and RB Herman Fontenot) brought the Green and Gold an extra choice in the third round. The second player to be chosen by Green Bay, turned out to be Matt Brock, who ranked as one of the premier pass rushers in the West as a senior at Oregon in 1988.

Brock, an imposing 6-4 1/2 and 267 pounds, closed out his college career with 19 sacks, eight of them last year. He also performed well at right defensive tackle in the Hula Bowl following the '88 season.

The Packers' own third round selection evoked fond memories in vintage members of the Packer faithful. It found them drafting quarterback Anthony Dilweg, grandson of former Packer starter Lavvie Dilweg, an all-around end who helped the Packers win their first three NFL championships in 1929-30-31.

Anthony, of ideal dimensions for the position at 6-3 1/2 and 215 pounds, had added lustre to the family name as a collegian at Duke, setting Atlantic Coast Conference records for passing yardage (3,824), touchdowns (4) and total offense (3,713) to merit selection as the ACC's offensive Player of the Year. He also closed out his career fourth on the school's all-time passing list after only one season as a starter.

Even more significant, in the eyes of Infante, who prizes intelligence above all other assets, Dilweg tied for the highest IQ score in the nation among draft eligible quarterbacks.

Braatz and Infante continued to focus on upgrading the offense in the next two rounds, selecting a pair of wide receivers and a running back. They opted for Erik Affholter of USC in the fourth round—a highly disciplined pattern runner with sure hands—and another wideout, mercurial Jeff Query of Millikin, with the Packers' own fifth round selection, then tapped versatile running back Vince Workman of Ohio State with the fifth round choice acquired from Cleveland.

Affholter, a compact 5-11 and 181 pounds, set USC records for most receptions in a season (68 in 1988) and in a career (123) en route to earning Sporting News first team All-America honors.

Quarterback Anthony Dilweg, grandson of Packer great Lavvie Dilweg, was a record-breaking passer at Duke.

Query, one of the more intriguing athletes in the '89 draft, is a 5-11, 165-pound speedster who has been clocked at a swift 4.3 seconds for the 40-yard dash and averaged an impressive 21.4 yards per reception.

Braatz says of him, "The guy dominated that league (the College Conference of Illinois-Wisconsin) . . . He's really interesting."

Workman, an all-purpose athlete ideally suited to Infante's multiple approach offense, is a talented runner who averaged 4.46 yards per rush at Ohio State, an excellent receiver (he caught 26 passes for 354 yards as a junior to finish as the team's No. 2 receiver) and a solid blocker. A well-knit 5-10 and 193 pounds, he had his best season as a runner as a sophomore in 1986, amassing 1,030 yards in 210 carries for an impressive 4.6-yard average.

The Packers addressed their placekicking problem in the sixth round, selecting Chris Jacke of UTEP, whom the coaching and scouting staffs had ranked as the premier kicker in the draft.

The possessor of a strong, accurate leg, Jacke was just short of perfection as a senior, hitting on 25 of 27 field goal tries and all 48 extra points he attempted.

Packer Special Teams Coordinator Howard Tippett, impressed with Jacke's leg strength notes, "He gets the ball up in a hurry and he's got good trajectory on the ball."

The emphasis shifted to the defense in the last six rounds, which saw the Green and Gold add a defensive end, two cornerbacks and two safeties among seven selections, the exceptions being a punter and an offensive tackle.

Mark Hall, a 6-4, 285-pound defensive tackle of Southwest Louisiana was the seventh round nominee, and teammate Thomas King, a free safety, was the Packers' first pick in the eighth round.

Hall, earlier a prep All-American at Patterson, LA, High School, led the Cajuns' defense in total tackles as a senior with 101, including 47 solos.

King, 6-1 and 190, was a fixture in the SWL secondary behind Hall, leading his unit in tackles each of his last two seasons despite missing the first three games of the "88 season after suffering a broken ankle. Thomas, who excels in the bump-and-run, established himself as one of the most punishing hitters in the nation in 1987 as a junior when he was involved in 113 tackles, including 53 solos.

The Packers tapped punter Brian Shulman with their second selection in the eighth round—one acquired in the fourth round, draft day trade with the Redskins. As was the case with Jacke, the Packer coaching and scouting staffs has the Auburn specialist ranked No. 1 among last season's collegiate punters.

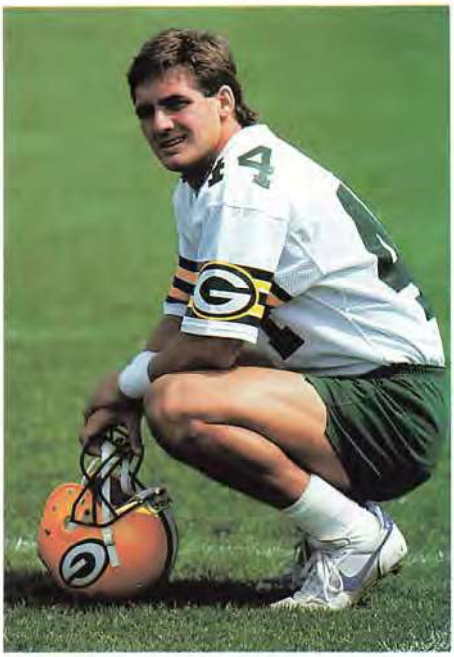
The 5-10, 184-pound native of Brentwood, TN, a two-step punter, had the fastest get-off time of all punters in the draft, according to Tippett. He averaged 41.2 yards for 50 punts last season, emerging with an impressive 39-yard net average.

"He can be like a Dale Hatcher (of the Los Angeles Rams)," Tippett says of Shulman. "He can just hang it up there and cut down the return. He can do what you ask him to."

Tackle Scott Kirby of Arizona State, the ninth round choice, played a major role in the Sun Devils' attack, helping them average an imposing 360-yards-plus in total offense last season. The 6-6, 284-pound Pinellas, FL, product earned second team All-Pacific Conference honors in the process.

The balance of the draft was devoted to spicing the competition in the secondary via the selection of defensive backs in each of the last three picks.

The tenth round brought Ben Jessie, a 6-foot, 205-pound cornerback from Southwest Texas State, where he was a three-year starter; the eleventh produced Cedric Stallworth, a 6-foot, 180-pound cornerback from Georgia Tech who was named to the All-Atlantic Coast Conference team following a senior season in which he registered 60 tackles, intercepted three passes and broke up five others; and the twelfth and final round brought a king-size strong safety, 6-2, 209-pound Stan Shiver, who earned a reputation as a resounding hitter while a four-year starter at Florida State.



Erik Affholter, set USC records for most receptions in a season (68) and in a career (123).

The Packers' New President

Bob Harlan

by Dale Hofmann
The Milwaukee Sentinel

When Judge Robert Parins decided last December that it was time for somebody else to shoulder the linebacker-sized load of running Green Bay's pro football franchise, the right man for the job wasn't hard to find.

He still isn't. And chances are he never will be.

Meet Robert E. Harlan, ninth president and chief executive officer of the Green Bay Packers. Or have you already met? If so, it's not surprising.

In the 18 years that Bob Harlan has spent serving the Packers, first as an assistant general manager and most recently as executive vice president, he has become one of the more visible and certainly more accessible people in the organization. Now that he's running the show, that's not going to change.

It figures that a guy who once wanted to spend his life writing sports thinks a lot about communicating. And a fellow who's been around games all of this life just naturally is partial to teamwork.

So you can expect to see plenty of both in the Harlan Administration. The man likes to talk to people, and he's rarely met a new idea that he didn't want to take a look at.

"Obviously one of my main priorities is communications," said Harlan. "I want to get to know fans. I know they're frustrated, and we are, too. Maybe there's something we can do, besides winning, to let them know that we're not just sitting up here and ignoring everybody.

"I'll still take my own telephone calls, and I'll be accessible to the media. I know reporters have deadlines, and sometimes they need someone to give an answer on things as they come up. I may not be able to comment sometimes, but I'll be available."

As far as the public is concerned, he'll even buy coffee. One of Harlan's plans for getting to know fans calls for annual breakfast meetings with season ticket holders. He'll pick 100 of them at random in both the Green Bay and Milwaukee areas and invite them to sit down with him and his staff and get their feelings on the team.

Harlan expects he'll do more listening than talking at those get-togethers, but that's fine with him. He wants to listen to a lot of people. All kinds of people, including his employees and his bosses.

He plans to give board members regular written updates between meetings.

"I feel very fortunate to have the talents available that we have on our board of directors," said Harlan. "We have to work together. And I feel strongly about sitting down and listening to ideas. There aren't too many new ideas around.

"We'll have staff meetings every Tuesday. It you don't let people know their jobs are important, you're wasting their time. I want to be sure that everybody in the public relations department has the same answers to the same questions."

Tom Braatz, the Packers' executive vice president of football operations, will be at those meetings, but Harlan makes it clear that the football people will continue to run the football operation. He's there to support them, not get in their way.

There's no George Steinbrenner in Bob Harlan, although there is a fair amount of Bud Selig.

"I like the way Bud Selig runs the Brewers," he said. "I want to be supportive of our people the way he is of theirs. We have all the tools here. We have the right people in those positions, and I think things are already getting better.

"Lindy is too good of a coach for us not to get better. Football-wise, I think we're in a good position. I don't want to say we'll go 9-7 or 10-6 or anything like that. I just know I'm feeling more confident."

Lindy Infante is the fourth coach the Packers have hired since Harlan arrived on the Packer scene, and none of them has been what anyone could call fabulously successful in that time. Many fans have grown tired of blaming coaches for the team's troubles on the field and have taken to blaming that faceless villain "the organization."

Now that he heads the organization, it's Harlan's job to face the criticism. At least, he's not having any trouble understanding it.

"That means people are frustrated, and I don't blame them," he said. "For one thing, we waited too long to put somebody in Tom Braatz's place. Because Vince Lombardi could handle that job as well as coach, we seemed to think everybody could do it.

"But times have changed, and we think our last couple of drafts have shown that the situation is improving. I know our scouting department is better organized.

"Even now, we may be asking Tom to do too much. Down the road, we may have to look at adding somebody to negotiate contracts."

That's a job Harlan himself held for 14 years, and it too has changed a great deal. In fact, the entire economic structure of the league is on kind of a post pattern all its own, and Harlan is vitally concerned about that.

He notes the new rule restricting training camp rosters to 80 players as one reflection of the NFL's reaction to money problems. But that's just a start.

"Between 13 and 16 teams lost money last year, and without a collective bargaining agreement, who knows what will happen?" said Harlan. "We need a salary scale for rookies, and we need a salary cap.

Regardless of what the league does collectively, Harlan says the Packers have to make some moves on their own to remain financially stable. Next to communications, nothing is closer to his heart than marketing. And he says the club will be looking very closely at new ways to make money.

"In the past, national television money could handle things for us, but now we have to expand other sources of revenue," he said. "We're looking at more private boxes at Lambeau Field as well as club seats. And we have great hopes that if there's a new stadium in Milwaukee, we can work out some agreement on the boxes there.

"People say 'Why not just play all of our games in Green Bay?' But I think that would be a major public relations mistake. Milwaukee is very important to us.

"We are thinking about putting a marketing person in Milwaukee. We need to be creative. If you have a 50,000-seat stadium and you're charging $21 a ticket, and somebody else is charging $28 a ticket and has 80,000 seats, all at once it's not the same. And we can't raise ticket prices all the time. We want to be very careful about that."

It's those careful decisions that Harlan will now be making all of the time in a job that can be both lonely and scary. But everything he's done in the past 18 years has helped him get ready for the challenge. And he sounds neither lonely nor scared.

"Scared is not a good word," said Harlan. "I'm just anxious to get on with it. I have a great feeling for this organization. Now we have to cherish the tradition and face the problems."

Retiring Judge Reviews His Tenure

by Harry Maier
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Judge Robert J. Parins can look back on his seven years as president and chief executive officer of the Green Bay Packers with mixed emotions.

He takes pleasure in the strong financial condition of the corporation and development of a well-organized administration.

He is disappointed that the Packers haven't been able to come up with a winning combination on the field.

Judge Parins' presidential tenure ended at the annual shareholders meeting June 5. Parins, who turns 71 August 23, was succeeded by Bob Harlan, former executive vice president of administration.

The eighth person in the 70-year history of the Green Bay Packers to hold the office, he was elected chairman of the Packer board after retiring as president.

"There are no particular events to highlight when not having had a successful effect on the field. The wins and losses are a major disappointment for us and the fans," Judge Parins said. "Everything is equated with winning ball games.

"The early years with Bart (Starr) were exciting. There was the strike, but we finished in the playoffs. Even with a January game, we had beautiful weather," Parins said, particularly referring to the fact that January in Green Bay is not the worst of all seasons.

He said, "There is a great deal of satisfaction from developing a good organization. We have good personnel, a delineated line of responsibilities and a good hold on the budget process.

"From that standpoint, things have gone well."

Despite the effort at administering the company, Parins said. "Having a bad season and all goes down the drain."

He said that is not something that is unique to Green Bay, but is a feeling shared throughout the National Football League.

"Winning is the name of the game."

From the standpoint of the corporation and the league, Parins said there is a concern for the substantial increase in players' salaries.

"This is a genuine concern to us and to the league," he said.

During his tenure, the Packers have made significant investments in the physical plant, adding 72 private boxes along the rim of the stadium, made major improvements to the administrative offices, constructed the indoor practice facility and completed a major expansion of the training quarters, strength room and locker room for the players.

"That all adds to our image around the league," Parins said. "We have invested our assets prudently. We are second to none with our physical plant."

Even with those substantial expenditures, the net worth of the corporation nearly doubled from $19.5 million to $32 million, and the financial reserves rose to a record $18 million during his tenure.

Parins is particularly pleased with the establishment of the Green Bay Packers Foundation, set up in 1987, which he said will assure continued contributions from the Packer organization to charity in the years to come.

The first grants, made in 1988, totaled more than $42,000.

Looking back on his relationship with the team, Parins said, "This has been a good job. It is highly visible in the community and it is highly rewarding in terms of the people who I have been working with, both at the club and league levels."

Looking ahead, Parins said he has no specific plans.

He will accept some work as a reserve judge, having maintained some judicial responsibilities ever since retiring from the bench seven years ago.

"Also, I'll be available around here (Packer office) for help in any capacity," he said.

Golf and fishing also rank high in his retirement plans.

Despite a handicap he has had since he was 12 years of age, Parins manages to swing a mean left-handed golf club, shooting in the 90's with regularity.

His best score was in the low 80's.

Parins lost his right arm when he was struck by an automobile while riding a bicycle near the family farm in the Green Bay area.

It was that injury that ultimately led him to his vocation in law.

He said members of the state vocational rehabilitation department urged him to get into law, and he said it was something he started thinking about way back in seventh grade and through his high school days at Green Bay East.

After graduating from the University of Wisconsin Law School in 1942, he worked briefly for Employers Mutual Insurance in Wausau and Minneapolis, but in 1944 returned to Green Bay, joining Meyer Cohen in the practice of law.

"We had a very rewarding relationship," he said of that experience. He remained with Cohen until being elected a Brown County circuit judge in 1966, a position he resigned to become Packer president on June 3, 1982.

Parins and his wife, Elizabeth, have five grown children. They are Claire Braun, who operates a family restaurant in Ripon, WI; Andree, also of Ripon; Richard, president of North Shore Bank in Green Bay; Teresa Eckberg, and LuAnn of Huntington Beach, CA, an expert sailmaker who was a member of Dennis Connor's crew when he regained the America's Cup with the "Discovery" in 1987.

The Packers Lose A Great Fan

When the late Dominic Olejniczak was in grade school, he sneaked into Green Bay's Hagemeister Park in the early days of the Roaring '20s to hero worship such early Packer stars as Verne Lewellen and Cub Buck.

He cut his teeth—at least figuratively—on the colorful likes of Jug Earp and Cowboy Wheeler, among others, when the National Football League was a fledgling and franchises were forming and disbanding almost monthly.

It was the beginning of a lifelong love affair with Green Bay's professional football team for the youthful Olejniczak, a pupil at St. Mary of the Angels, who at that point had no way of knowing he would one day become president of the Packer organization—as well as mayor of the city.

He not only became the team's president—in 1958—but was to serve in that capacity for 24 years, longer than any other man to occupy the position in the club's 70-year history.

And, upon completion of the tenure in 1982, he moved up to a new position—chairman of the board of the Green Bay Packers, Inc., completing a cycle which had begun when he was elected to the board of directors in 1950.

During the 40-year span of his service to the Packers, Olejniczak was to play a key role in two major moves which proved vital to the team's survival in the expanding NFL.

The first was leading the drive—as mayor of Green Bay—to build the current stadium, Lambeau Field, a necessity if the Packers were to remain competitive with pro football's metropolitan giants. It was completed and dedicated in 1957.

The second, which followed closely upon the heels of the first, was bringing a then obscure Vince Lombardi to Green Bay in 1959. The former New York Giants offensive coordinator quickly resuscitated the Packers' football fortunes, which had seen them fall to an all-time low (1-10-1) the previous year, and himself became a legend in an astonishingly short time. Lombardi maneuvered the Green and Gold to five world championships in seven years, an achievement which remains without parallel in the history of the NFL.

From a personal standpoint, Olejniczak was most proud of his role in shepherding the stadium project to fruition.

"Without question," he once said, "the erection of the stadium has been the greatest source of satisfaction to me during my long association with the Packers. We started out with, to use round numbers, a capacity of 32,000 and increased it, by four major additions, to more than 56,000.

"That," he said proudly, "proved to the football world that the Packers and Green Bay could compete with the largest cities in the country.

"But it didn't surprise me. It just bore out the confidence that we've always had in our fans—that they were ready and willing from the very beginning to support the team."

Olejniczak's longtime love affair with the Packers, which had begun nearly 70 years earlier, came quietly to an end this year. On the evening of April 14, after a long battle with declining health, he died at the age of 80.

Although he was chairman of the Packer board of directors at the time of his death, on Sunday afternoons "Ole" had been first, last and always a fan, a loyalist with deep and unswerving affection for his team.

And he passed on that loyalty to his family. His elder son, Tom, today himself a member of the team's board of directors, looked back in fond memory and said, "He was a great fan . . . we all have green and gold blood."

The Doctor Of Defense

Defensive coordinator Hank Bullough weighs the next move in sideline session with co-captain John Anderson.

by Bud Lea
The Milwaukee Sentinel

It may be strange to talk about a team that won only four games last year as being on the upswing. But the Green Bay Packers spent most of last year acting like a team that didn't realize how good it could be—on defense.

Are we serious? Look folks, we're not talking about the fall of the Roman Empire here. We're just saying if the offense shows improvement this season, it could put Green Bay in playoff contention because the Packers have a defense. They had the seventh best defense in the NFL in 1988.

You look for bright spots, and they're on defense. They didn't have the greatest talent in the league. But, as a group, they were good enough—dedicated, teeth-gritting overachievers mostly.

Hank Bullough is the brains behind the Packers' defense. If an assistant coach could be named "coach of the year", a case could be made for giving it to Bullough.

Look what's happened to this defense. In 1987, the strike year, the Packers' defense finished 14th. Then Bullough stepped in and the Packers finished with their highest defensive rating since 1974. Defense became the Packers' strength.

Bullough has done it mostly with meat and potato guys, some aging parts and some new. Not one player made the Pro Bowl, although Tim Harris, a blue-chip linebacker, certainly deserved to go.

"You don't need six all pros," said Bullough, who had none. "We have smart, unselfish guys who know their limitations and are willing to work hard to make the whole unit sound.

"I've never been associated with a group that worked or tried harder. Sometimes we may get a little overmatched, but I don't have any reason to think they won't play very, very hard."

Bullough is a plotter of some of the NFL's more innovative game plans. In the league opener against the Los Angeles Rams, he put in a six-linebacker, five-defensive back defense in third-and-long situations to confuse quarterback Jim Everett. Although the Rams romped, 34-7, Bullough's strategies endeared him to his players.

"I just loved to see that," said cornerback Dave Brown, pro football's leading active interceptor, about the unusual defensive scheme Bullough unveiled against the Rams. "Hank is an experienced defensive coordinator. He utilizes that experience by designing a system that works for the personnel he has. Besides, it gets many people involved in the game. This is a team game."

Bullough has made believers out of the Packers. He has gotten them enthusiastic about his weirdly complex schemes.

"Hank knows defenses as well as anybody," said Mark Murphy, the veteran strong safety who led the Packers in interceptions (5), fumble recoveries (5) and unassisted tackles (86). "He knows where opponents are vulnerable, and he knows where they are strong.

"Those unorthodox looks he has come up with can create a lot of problems for the offense because they are so geared in seeing people line up in certain positions. It can create a whole lot of confusion."

John Anderson has been in the league 11 years. He will not compare this coach with that coach; it's just not his nature. But the veteran linebacker knows that Bullough's system works.

"Hank's got a sharp eye," Anderson said. "He'll look at films of an opponent and see things you can't see. He makes good calls. He's got us flying to the ball."

The Packers intercepted 20 passes last season. They recovered 21 fumbles.

"Hank's got us thinking turnovers," said linebacker Johnny Holland. "That's one thing that can get a defense motivated."

The Wisconsin media started calling Bullough the "Doctor of Defense." At Cincinnati, he was called a genius for transforming a Bengal defense, which had finished last in 1980, into the fourth-best unit in the league, and two years later into the NFL's No. 1 unit.

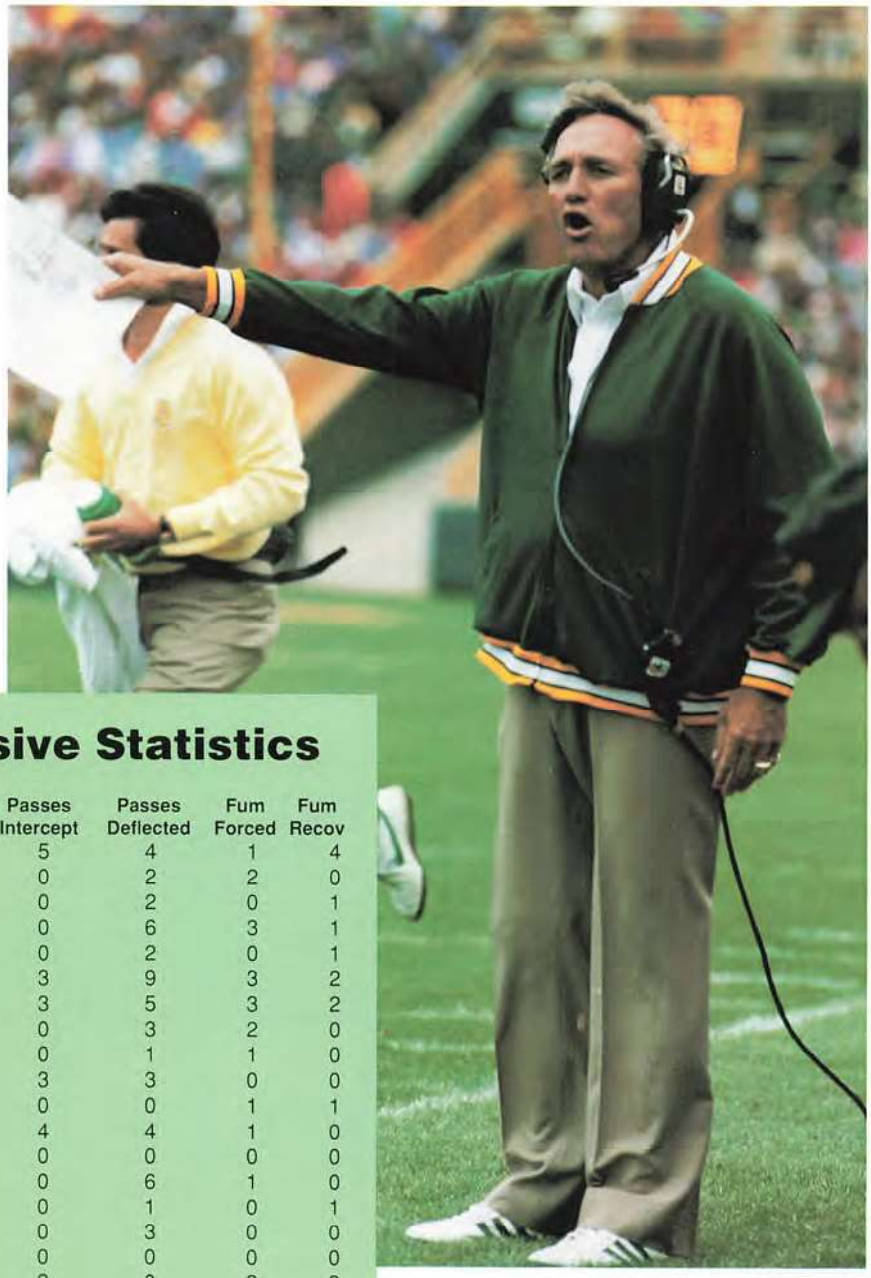
Genius?

"I'm not a genius," Bullough said. "I'm not a mad scientist.

"Everything I try, I try to be sound at. I don't leave guys uncovered. But I do like to come up with things that will make a team go back to the drawing board."

Harris is Bullough's big-play guy. The third-year linebacker finished fifth in the NFL overall in quarterback sacks with 13 1/2.

'Bullough stepped in and the Packers finished with their highest defensive rating since 1974.'



Bullough, seldom loath to express an opinion, registers a beef with an unseen official.

"We just don't let him go all the time," Bullough said about his designated pass rusher. "A lot of people think that. He's kind of limited, but we try to free him up a lot."

Whatever you say, coach. But Harris does set the tempo for the defense.

The Packers mostly use a 3-4 defense. However, Bullough is not locked into it. When Harris lines up to rush the passer, he is a defensive end.

Bullough is one of the few top defensive coordinators who has already been a head coach, at Buffalo (1985-86). He said the rules of the game still favor the offense.

"They've taken everything away from you," Bullough said. "You can't hit five yards past the line of scrimmage. You used to be able to bump and run all over the field.

"You can't touch the quarterback if the play's over. The trend definitely favors the offense. There's no sense in worrying about it."

Instead, Bullough spends time in his lab and on the practice field. He has given the Packers' defense something it hasn't had for years—a hungry, nasty look.

Bullough first arrived in Green Bay to coach in 1984. But he left Forrest Gregg's staff after just 4 1/2 months to become a head coach in the USFL at Pittsburgh only to see the Mauler franchise dissolve before he put on a headset. He subsequently was named head coach of the Bills.

Under Dick Modzelewski, who moved from defensive line coach to replace Bullough as coordinator in 1984, the Packers' defense rose from 28th in 1983 to yearly rankings of 16th, 12th, 14th and 11th.

Bullough helped teach Modzelewski his 3-4 stack defense during their years together at Cincinnati. Because Bullough was one of the early NFL practitioners of the 3-4, it stands that he has a greater variety of defenses than Modzelewski.

He is a master at teaching aggressive football. His players are skilled at knocking the ball loose and creating turnovers. He has a reputation in the league for being a big blitzer.

"You can't be a finesse football team," Bullough said. "I told our defensive unit I want them to be known as a WATS team: winning, aggressive, tough, and smart."

Bullough has made some changes for the '89 season. He has flip-flopped defensive ends Robert Brown and Shawn Patterson. Brown is being moved from right to left end to help stop the run, and Patterson is being positioned in the pass-rushing lane at right end.

Bullough, an innovative strategist, diagrams a defensive play for his starting linebackers (L-R, Tim Harris, John Anderson, Brian Noble and Johnny Holland) in the classroom.

'Hank's got us thinking turnovers. That's one thing that can get a defense motivated.'

"Our strength is our 11 guys," he said. "We have players who complement each other. We don't have selfish guys.

"Robert Brown, Jerry Boyarsky, Bob Nelson, Blaise Winter are workers. They are factory guys. They don't thrive on publicity the way a lot of defensive linemen do."

Bullough, 54, has been in football most of his life. He was drafted out of Michigan State by the Packers in the fifth-round of the 1955 draft. He has coached at Michigan State, Baltimore, New England, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Green Bay.

"I'm coaching at a place I really enjoy," he said. "At this point in my career, it's important that I work where I like to work. I'm not a 23-year-old coach who wants to use this as a step up the ladder. I'm happy here."

This is good news for Green Bay. If the Packers show a jump in the defensive standings from last year's seventh to say fourth or fifth, then maybe there's something to this genius business after all.

RECORD BREAKING ROOKIE

by Pete Faust
The Milwaukee Journal

HE CAUGHT MORE PASSES IN 1988 than any rookie in Green Bay Packers history. He had more receptions than any other rookie wide receiver last year in the National Football League, leading a much-touted group that included six first-round draft choices. Still, it was an ambivalent record-breaking season for No. 1 draft choice Sterling Sharpe. The former South Carolina star was satisfied that he caught 55 passes but had hoped to make a bigger impact in his rookie year.

With a season of not entirely hands-on experience behind him, Sharpe is looking to catch on to stardom in 1989 and become one of the league's premier receivers.

"I feel very strongly that I'm going to have a bigger year," Sharpe said. "It was a learning year for all of us. You have to make people have confidence in you.

"You come out of college with ability and a lot of stats, but this is a new level. When everyone is watching game films, you want people to say, 'This guy is getting behind people. Let's get him the ball.' That's what I want to do."

Packers head coach Lindy Infante and receivers coach Buddy Geis also feel that Sharpe provided only a glimpse last year of what he can do and that bigger things are ahead.

"He caught a lot of passes and really had a solid season last year," Infante said. "I wouldn't call it spectacular, but I think it was a good start for him. I would expect him to make a good strong leap ahead this year.

"I think he'll come back strong. We might get a true feel for what Sterling Sharpe can be in the future. He knows the system to a great degree. He won't have to think so much, and it'll be more of a reaction. Maybe the athletic ability will surface even more than it did last year."

Sharpe reported late last year to training camp because of a contract holdout, and his season got off to a slow start. He had only one reception after his first three games.

Sterling Sharpe, screened from the enemy by center Mark Cannon, pivots to head up field after making one of his 55 receptions–an all-time Packer record for a rookie receiver. The record, one of the oldest in Packer history, was set by Bill Howton in 1952 with 53 catches.

Sharpe, known for his ability to run after the catch, circles around block by teammate Patrick Scott in search of "daylight".

But after injuries to Walter Stanley and Phillip Epps, Sharpe saw more playing time and had a strong second half of the season. He made 34 catches in his last seven games to finish with 55 receptions for 791 yards and 1 touchdown. His reception total set a Packers rookie record, breaking the mark of 53 set by Bill Howton in 1952.

"I'm not happy they got hurt," Sharpe said. "But it did turn out to be a plus for me and did allow me to be a major factor in several football games."

Sharpe and Stanley each had two of the Packers' five 100-yard receiving days last season. Sharpe, who started all 16 games, caught 7 passes for 137 yards against Chicago Sept. 25 and 8 passes for 124 yards against Detroit Nov. 20.

Sharpe's 137 yards against the Bears was the Packers' highest single-game total of the year. His eight receptions against Detroit tied him with Keith Woodside for most receptions in a game.

What's a realistic goal for Sharpe this season? Geis said that if Sharpe stays healthy, he could easily catch 70 to 75 passes for more than 1,000 yards.

"He's got the ability," Geis said. "I think he really learned a lot last year about just what it takes at this level of play.

"He understands the intensity that is required. I've never seen him work harder than he did at our first mini-camp."

Geis and Infante would like the 5-foot 11-inch Sharpe, who weighed in at 207 pounds for the Packers' first mini-camp, to play at about 200 pounds in '89.

"Sterling's got the type of body that's never going to be greyhound looking," Infante said. "He is not built that way. I think we have to understand that as coaches. But by the same token, he has to understand that carrying that extra poundage is not going to help him to be quicker and faster. I think he agrees.

"When he starts to pass up that particular weight, I think he starts to carry more than he needs to carry. A lot of his weight is in his lower body and hips, and that sometimes is not bad. If you carry it around your midsection it becomes a problem."

Sharpe arrived in Green Bay with a reputation as a heavy hitter, a dangerous big-play man. At South Carolina, he set career records for receptions (163), receiving yards (2,444) and touchdowns (25).

He had displayed his propensity to score much earlier in his football career. As an eighth-grader, he was called up to play for the Glennville (GA) High School junior-varsity team. The first time he touched the ball, he returned a kickoff for a touchdown, only to have it called back because of a penalty. No matter, he returned the next kick all the way, too.

With the Packers, however, he was disappointed that he didn't have more big plays. He caught only one touchdown pass and dropped more balls than he had expected.

"I think I picked up the defenses very well," Sharpe said. "That's probably the only thing I thought I did real well last year. I recognized them, but I didn't go through and do what I had to do last year.

"I didn't think I caught the ball like I should have or could have. I didn't come up with enough big plays. There were a lot of opportunities."

In fairness, two of his biggest plays were called back because of penalties—a 43-yard reception against Tampa Bay September 11th and a 60-yard gainer against New England October 9th.

"Certainly, there's some big-play potential there, but it's got to be brought forward a little bit more," Infante said. "Because of the fact that he knows what we're doing and that his techniques are getting better, I think he'll be more sure-handed and confident. I sense already that he is a more mature player, and I think that will produce more big plays.

"He has shown in the past that he is a good runner after he catches the ball. That's something we need more of."

Sharpe compared well against the other first-round rookie receivers last year, leading the group in receptions and receiving yards.

Heisman Trophy winner Tim Brown of the Los Angeles Raiders had 43 receptions for 725 yards and 5 touchdowns, Michael Irvin of Dallas had 32 catches for 654 yards and 5 touchdowns, Anthony Miller of San Diego had 36 receptions for 526 yards and 3 touchdowns, Aaron Cox of the Los Angeles Rams had 28 catches for 590 yards and 5 touchdowns, and Wendell Davis of the Chicago Bears had 15 receptions for 220 yards and no touchdowns.

"I think Sterling wasn't satisfied with his year," Geis said. "But if you look at the other receivers, he outplayed them. It's that simple."

Sharpe is blessed with speed and strength. He has been timed at 4.45 seconds in the 40-yard dash and is considered one of the team's strongest receivers.

At South Carolina, his coaches considered him to be extraordinarily strong for a receiver. That combination of strength and speed may be what eventually separates him from the other receivers.

"I think Sharpe will be an excellent receiver," said Tom Braatz, the Packers' executive vice president of football operations. "He's got everything in the world to do it. There is no reason for him not to do it."

Sterling, finding another use for his helmet, relaxes and reflects along the sideline.

The Spotlight's On SHAWN

by Sharon Raboin
Green Bay Press Gazette

The summer before his senior season at Arizona State, Shawn Patterson landed a construction job.

But he decided to quit after just one day.

And the reason? The long hours? The exhausting work?

Not at all. Patterson wanted to play in the National Football League, and he realized that he wouldn't be able to work eight hours in the intense Arizona sun and train properly.

Out went the job. Patterson sold his prize jeep, purchased a scooter to get around in and lived off the rest of the money.

It was his life-long dream to play in the NFL, and Patterson was determined to give it his best shot. The regular paychecks would have to wait.

"I did everything that I thought it took to win, to be the best," said Patterson, a 6-foot-5 and 266-pound defensive lineman. "Then I wouldn't have any regrets. The worst thing would be to not make it and say to myself: 'Maybe if I would have lifted a little harder, ran a little harder I would have had the second wind in the fourth quarter to overcome and prevail.' "

Last year the Green Bay Packers selected Patterson in the second round of the draft. Patterson was the 34th player chosen overall and the sixth defensive lineman.

The summer that Patterson and a couple of his close friends devoted to football paid off. All those mornings of rising at 5 a.m. to pump iron. The afternoons of basketball and the nights of running, rotating between distance and mountain work. Patterson and his friends would charge up a mountain next to Sun Devil Stadium in Tempe, Arizona. Their legs and lungs would burn but the NFL was in the back of their minds and they pushed themselves to the limit.

"We would get a huge bowl of pasta, get a can of (spaghetti) sauce and eat it until you'd almost want to throw up," Patterson said. "Just trying to gain weight."

Patterson is articulate, hard-working and conscientious. He sets goals and does everything in his power to achieve them. Greg Blache, the defensive line coach of the Packers, praises his work habits and his approach to the game.

"I heard a saying once," Patterson said. "If you're not the lead dog, the scenery never changes. I always want to be the first in everything. I want to be the best defensive lineman there ever was."

Patterson is critical of himself. Most likely the Packers were more satisfied with his rookie season than he was.

"I felt like I could have done a lot better than I did," said Patterson, the youngest of three children. "I made a lot of mistakes I won't make this year."

Blache offers a different viewpoint. "I thought the kid responded extremely well," Blache said. "Handled the transition well, handled the pressures of the NFL well. Never lost his confidence or poise. Battled through some tough times. Just really showed a lot of character, a lot of moxie. I was really impressed with him."

Next to linebacker Tim Harris, Patterson was perhaps the best pass rusher that the Packers had. Harris led the Packers with 13 1/2 sacks and Patterson and defensive end Blaise Winter were second with five apiece. Of the defensive linemen, Patterson ranked third with 42 tackles, 33 unassisted and 9 assisted.

Patterson became an instant starter when left end

The performance of Patterson was impresive, Blache said. Patterson was not a regular starter and was forced to play every position on the line other than nose tackle.

"Shawn Patterson is consistent," Blache said. "Like the tide going in and out. There are certain things you can count on, and Shawn Patterson is one of them. Everytime he does something, he's doing it to be the best he can.

"The kid is going to be special. I said it when we drafted him and I believe it more today. He will be in the Pro Bowl before it's over."

Patterson overcame a right hamstring injury in the first game of the season against the Los Angeles Rams. He sat out the next game in Tampa Bay against the Bucs before returning. Patterson said the injury nagged him most of the season.

"It's very frustrating," Patterson said. "You want to go out there and be the best. I love to practice. I want the reps. The more reps the better I can be. You want to be the kind of player that you know you are. And you have something like an anchor holding you back."

This season Patterson is projected to start at right end and Brown, who excels in two-gapping, at left end. Blache said Winter should be the first player off the bench to relieve both of them in case of injury or ineffectiveness.

In the off-season, the Packers gambled with Carreker. Each team could protect 37 players, and Carreker, a first-round draft choice in 1984, was not one of them. The 12th player taken overall in the draft, Carreker never developed into an outstanding pass rusher. Carreker ended up signing a series of one-year contracts with the Denver Broncos.

"Alphonso not being protected was a lot of factors," Blache said. "Because of the salary. Because of the two knee operations. Because of the track record that he had. I don't think Shawn's potential was that much of a factor. But at the same time, we knew we had a young kid with a lot of football in front of him. We knew a guy who was going to be a presence, that was only going to get better."

Patterson is left-handed, making the right side a more natural position. In college, Patterson said he played both sides.

"I feel more comfortable on the right side," Patterson said. "I think there are more opportunities because most quarterbacks are right-handed and I'll be coming from the blind side."

This season Blache said he expects more production out of Patterson. He believes Patterson will be more confident, relaxed and instinctive.

Of course Patterson expects more out of himself, too.

"A lot more sacks," Patterson said. "A lot more playing time. A lot more tackles. Becoming more and more of a dominant force on the front line and helping the team win a lot more games this year."

Patterson will play the same side as Harris, who's another quick and aggressive player. That is expected to add a new dimension to the pass rush.

"I think (opponents) will have some problems," Blache said. "A lot of times, people would put their best pass protector on Timmy. But when you put them together, you better have two fine pass protectors over there. If you take away one, you have the problem of the other and they're both coming from the back side of the quarterback."

Statistics, said Blache, are overrated. The end result carries more importance. In the 3-4 base defense that the Packers play, Blache said defensive linemen have a harder time getting sacks.

"It's much tougher because you're lining right up on a guy's nose and you're trying to get around him," Blache said. "On a four-man front, you get single blocks plus you're on the shoulder. Here we get a lot of double teams and we're on the nose."

Shawn, focused on the quarterback, strives to out-flank Jets' Derland Moore.

☆ NEW HALL OF FAMER ☆

Making Packer Grade Still Wood's Top Thrill

by Tom Murphy
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Every pro's biggest thrill is making it to the National Football League Hall of Fame.

Except Willie Wood's.

The diminutive Green Bay Packer defensive back who is one of four 1989 inductees into NFL shrine, claims, believably, that his dream of making the grade didn't occur until his playing days were over.

"My biggest thrill was just making the ball club," said Wood, a 5-foot-10, 165-pound free agent (1960-71) and prototype of today's free safety.

"That was my goal, to make the ball club. I had no agenda when it came to the Hall of Fame.

"I considered myself privileged just to make the club," he said in a telephone interview from his home in Washington, D. C., where he is a general and mechanical contractor.

But as the seasons and years passed, the headlines faded and memories expanded and contracted Wood, admitted he felt he might have been overlooked by selectors.

"I was kind of concerned because so many of our guys went in there," Wood told Bob McGinn who covers the team for the Green Bay Press-Gazette. His reference was to 10 members of the 1961 NFL championship team already enshrined at Canton. The 10 include Coach Vince Lombardi.

Entry to the Hall may have been far from the front of Wood's mind during his playing years. That doesn't remove it from the pinnacle of his profession.

After all, how many receivers moved like Don Hutson of the Packers' second set of triple crown teams (1936, 1939, 1944)?

Or dealt a forearm shiver like the Bears' Bronko Nagurski, toe-dragged the sidelines like Dante Lavelli of the Browns or separated ball and ball carrier like Joe Greene of Pittsburgh?

Just those four and 144 more have made the grade in the NFL's 69 years. Entering with Wood this year are Art Shell, Terry Bradshaw and Mel Blount.

Wood, a Southern Calafornia T-formation quarterback had to beg for a tryout. The draft had passed him by.

He is one of six of the 129 players in the Hall who entered the NFL as

In 1960, Wood said, his only dream was to make one of the 13 NFL rosters. It was the same year Pete Rozelle assumed the commissioner's mantle. It was also the year before the Hall found a home in Canton, Ohio.

It was the year the upstart American Football Conference was born with the likes of the New York Titans and Dallas Texans (now Jets and Kansas City Chiefs). But they weren't on Willie's list. He was going to try first class first.

Twenty-nine years ago, Wood, rather Bill Butler, a counselor with the Metropolitan Police Boys Club (Washington, D.C.) and Wood's "mentor" wrote to the Packers, Rams, Giants and Browns seeking a tryout. Wood asked Butler to write the letters.

Jack Vainisi, the late Packer talent scout and the man many credit with building Vince Lombardi's dynasty, was the first to reply. The rest is NFL history.

Wood joined 23 defensive backs in Packer camp in 1960. Lombardi had brought the 1959 Packer team, his first, from the depths of a 1-10-1 record to a respectable 7-5. But that 7-5 club gave up almost as many points (246) as it scored (248) and defensive coach Phil Bengtson knew his backfield needed help. (Wood, incidentally, selected Bengtson to make his Hall of Fame introduction.)

Wood coached defensive backs for Harlan Svare's San Diego Chargers from 1972-74 and was head coach of the Philadelphia Bell of the World Football League in 1975-76. His team was in first place in mid-1976 when the WFL folded.

He then scouted for Oakland for one year before starting his own construction business.

In 1979, Wood joined Forrest Gregg's Argonaut staff in Toronto and succeeded his former teammate when Gregg moved to Cincinnati. He was dismissed after one full season and six games into his second.

In his 12 years as a Packer, Wood never missed a game. He became a starter in his second year and was there for the first whistle for 11 years.

"Determination probably was my trademark," Wood said. "I was talented but so were a lot of people."

His determination not only got Wood to the big leagues, it sent him to the Pro Bowl eight times and earned one or more all-pro honors for six seasons. He was a consensus all-pro from 1964 through 1966. Chalk one up for the little guys.

Mark Murphy, eyes characteristically focused on the football, had finest season of his 10-year career in 1988.

Mark Murphy's LUCKY BREAK

by Don Burke
The Milwaukee Sentinel

From his strong safety position, Mark Murphy led the Green Bay Packers in tackles last season.

But the tackle he'll probably most remember came not during his very active 1988 season. It was one he didn't make during an all but inactive rookie year nine seasons earlier.

A free agent out of West Liberty (West Virginia) State College, Murphy was a member of the Packers' kickoff team during the 1980 preseason. That was the year the Packers opened the exhibition schedule by playing the San Diego Chargers at the annual Hall of Fame Game in Canton, OH.

Murphy was born, raised and still makes his off-season home in Canton so the stands were dotted with family and friends anxious to see his first professional football game.

"That's always a nice weekend," Murphy remembered. "Coming out of college, and from a small school, our biggest crowd was probably 7-8,000. My first professional game was played at the Hall of Fame, before 25,000. So that was kind of neat, to play your first professional game in your hometown. I thought it was the neatest thing in the world."

Those feelings were great. But they didn't last long.

"Then I ran down on the opening kickoff and broke my wrist," said Murphy. "I thought I broke both of them . . . I had so much adrenaline flowing. I was in my hometown. I wanted to make the first tackle of the game and I just flew down there recklessly and boom.

"It was just one of those things. The ballcarrier was running and I don't know if I would have gotten him, but I dove to make the tackle. A blocker hit me from the side and he just drove me into the ground. I had my wrist down. I heard one pop and the other one swelled up too. I thought I had broken both my wrists on that one play."

Murphy said he played another four of five plays during the scoreless game. Eventually it was stopped due to an electrical storm. Although he was able to work out with the team within a few weeks while his right wrist remained in a cast, Murphy spent all but the last game of that first season on the Packers' injured reserve list.

Murphy realized the injury was the best thing that could have happened to him at the time. The break was, in fact, a break.

"It was good for me because the whole year was a learning year for me," he said. "It gave me the time I needed because I lacked the fundamentals in some areas. At West Liberty, they don't have the big money to get the best coaches and it wasn't until I got here that I learned how they want you to play in the NFL."

Yes, the good breaks have far outweighed the bad in Murphy's nine-year National Football League career. Despite missing two games with a hamstring injury last season, Murphy not only led the team in tackles with 86, but in interceptions (5) and in fumble recoveries (4) as well. The satisfaction he got from his personal performance, however, was overridden by the team's dismal 4-12 season.

"It was hard," he said. "I know we were better than four wins. Hopefully this year, with that year of seasoning, with a year of knowing Coach Infante's system and of knowing each other, we can turn things around.

"It was so frustrating last year. Everyone wants to win, but things just weren't clicking. You can't point the finger at any one thing. It was just little things.

"There were some days when we wouldn't be doing this and some days when we wouldn't be doing that. We were trying, but we just weren't meshing. Hopefully, we can change it."

It was early morning during the Packers' second mini-camp in May and Murphy, dressed and ready for practice an hour later, was seated on a sofa in the team's offices. Training camp was still two months away with the start of the regular season almost two months beyond that. It was a time for optimism.

"I can really notice the improvement this mini-camp as opposed to last year's mini-camp," Murphy said. "It seems like the intensity's up—we haven't hit yet—but still the enthusiasm's there. Guys are flying around during drills."

Even on the sidelines, Murphy is concentrating on the task at hand.

But Murphy has had a lot of practice at looking on the brighter side of life. As a youngster, he was afflicted with a disease which caused complete hair loss. Murphy's baldness is prime fodder for much ribbing by his teammates and he goes right along with it. While growing up, however, the hair loss was devastating.

"Most people assume I shave it," he said. "But my hair started falling out when I was in the third grade and it kept falling out for about a year. At first, being bald was a big adjustment for me. It bothered me for a couple of years. But after that, I adjusted to it.

"Sure, I had my share of spats. But I had some good friends and I had my two brothers. That definitely helped. It's a fact of life now. I can't change it.

"I took a lot of razzing as a kid, but I think it gave me confidence, discipline. You got to a point where what they said didn't matter. It just made you work harder, made you stronger as a person. Now I talk to people who are losing their hair and worried about it, because I know what they're going through. I can help them."

Murphy said his total hair loss has helped him in talking to children with cancer. Murphy is a parent himself. He and his wife, Pamela, have three young daughters–Kellyn, Kaitlyn and Kara.

"A lot of the young kids who go through chemotherapy lose their hair," he said. " I think it's easier for them to relate. If I can help them in any area, that's great. I hope I can."

His work with cancer patients is just part of the community service the 31-year-old Murphy is involved in. He is a board member of the Packers' 65 Roses Club which raises money to fight cystic fibrosis. In addition to his regular visits to area hospitals and talks before church groups, he is also involved in the Special Olympics and the Exceptional Olympics.

"I think that's important," he said of his community involvement. "I enjoy helping others and helping organizations. I think it's part of the game and I think it's important to get involved in things like that and visiting kids who look up to players. Some of these guys are role models to these kids."

Murphy said he never really intended to play pro football. While he played both football and baseball in high school, he was no Bo Jackson. In fact, he said he was probably a little bit better baseball player.

"But my biggest thing coming out of high school was I needed a scholarship—some money to apply toward my college education," he said. "Football was going to be the game that helped me get there. My parents couldn't afford it and I didn't know how many baseball scholarships were being given out back then. So, in my senior year, I concentrated on football.

"I wasn't that big. I wasn't that fast. The thing was I was a late bloomer. A couple of major colleges said, 'Walk on.' I had some smaller colleges that were interested. I ended up going to West Liberty. My brother went there and the defensive backfield coach there was from the Canton area. He kind of recruited me.

"They gave me a tuition waiver, which was like half a scholarship."

During his freshman year in college, Murphy grew quite a bit. He is now listed at 6-2 and 201 pounds. The following season, the new and improved Murphy was moved from cornerback—the position he had played as a college freshman and in high school—to safety.

"The NFL was never in my plans," he said. "My junior year I got letters from some NFL teams saying we enjoyed watching you last season and are looking forward to your senior year. That was kind of intimidating, to get letters with the Seattle Seahawks or the Cincinnati Bengals across the top. But I knew my chances were not good.

"Then my senior year went real well and there were three teams interested. Green Bay, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh. They all called quite a few times."

But when draft day came, no one called for Murphy.

"I really didn't expect to be drafted," he said. "Green Bay called before the draft and during it. It was around the fifth, sixth, or seventh round. They said, 'If things work out, we'll try to draft you in the next few rounds.' They didn't.

"But I wasn't ever disappointed. That would have been like icing on the cake. Just the fact that they were interested was enough for me.

"Then, after the draft, Green Bay was the first team to call. They had called three times during the draft so I knew they really were interested. They invited me to their free-agent camp. That was probably the important thing—that they were really interested. Eventually, that was why I signed with them. The other two teams never talked about drafting me."

Murphy served his apprenticeship as a reserve and special teams player, waiting for his chance. Arriving in Green Bay, he found his path blocked by Johnnie Gray, one of the better strong safeties in the league. He filled in for seven games in 1981 while Gray was injured, started 12 games in 1983 when Gray was shifted to free safety. He took over full time in 1984 when Gray was cut.

Murphy said he realized that the shoe is on the other foot now. That there is someone out there just waiting to take his job away. The Packers drafted three defensive backs in April's NFL draft and signed several free agents who play in the defensive backfield. Will it eventually be one of them?

"At this level, there's always younger guys coming in who are faster and they're getting stronger," he said. "I think that's what makes people perform—that competitiveness, there are always guys behind you, pushing you. It keeps your performance level up.

"I think a lot of times that's what I like about pro football. You've got that competitiveness, that drive to perform, to get good or better. To, each year, try and get a little bit better. Every year, it's the same. When I'm gone, the same thing is going to happen with the guy who eventually takes over my position. They'll bring in three or four guys to push him. That's the nature of the game. It's a business.

"But it's still fun. I enjoy it. It's kind of neat because you play all your life for free and all of a sudden you're here and you're getting paid for it.

"As a kid, you just go out in the backyard and play. In high school, you play for the enjoyment. In college, it's a little more serious. You have a scholarship. Here, you're getting paid for this. You can't beat it."

Stephanie Infante, who quickly became a visible force in the Green Bay community as an active volunteer, spends a quiet moment at home with the family dog, Copper.

A CELEBRITY IN HER OWN RIGHT

Stephanie Steps Forward

by Dian Page
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Stephanie Infante is an activist who came to Green Bay armed with the three C's–caring, compassion and concern.

Since arriving a tad over a year ago, this vivacious and outgoing wife of Green Bay Packers Head Coach Lindy Infante has captured the spotlight in her own right.

Hardly a shadow of her husband, Stephanie has become a visible force in her adopted community and state. The name of her game is volunteerism–and this 47-year-old mother of two teen-age sons practices what she preaches.

It took this bundle of energy no time at all to fill up her calendar with activities and projects that benefit so many others, making an impact through her volunteer efforts for Our Lady of Charity Center of Green Bay, Children's Hospital of Wisconsin, Cystic Fibrosis Foundation, Special Olympics and Paul's Pantry in Green Bay, a food pantry for the needy.

Appearing before area groups–she's received standing ovations–the effervescent Packers' first lady speaks out on the need for volunteers. She was part of Volunteer Award Day and did stints at volunteer workshops.

And it's all been so rewarding, affirms the green-eyed honey blonde. "It just feels good to volunteer. I think those who volunteer are the ones who benefit," she says knowingly. "To actually be there and doing (for others) is a feeling you just can't imagine."

Although her title is "celebrity spokesperson" for OLC, she modestly considers herself just a "spokesperson," a role that calls for numerous speaking engagements seeking support and monies for the treatment center for adolescents.

She was approached for the position just before the family's move to Green Bay from Cleveland, Ohio. And the Sisters of OLC have been a plus, she says with a radiant smile.

"I just love to go over and have lunch with the nuns . . . it's such a pick-me-up. They are so warm; I dearly love them."

Stephanie stepped before local television cameras as Northeast

Wisconsin co-chairperson of the Children's Miracle Network Telethon in June. Handling the microphone like a pro, she helped raise $291,395 for Children's Hospital of Milwaukee.

She also hosted a half-hour film for television–shown in Milwaukee–which took viewers on a guided tour of the non-profit medical facility, and she serves on the board of directors of the state Children's Hospital Foundation.

"Children's Hospital affects me the most because it deals with children," says the tireless worker. "They really get to me because they are children, a special gift from God and so helpless. They need someone to fight for them."

Stephanie says it is particularly difficult when she sees young people her sons' ages. "They could be mine."

Lindy's No. 1 fan was a vital part of the first "Lindy Roast" in April, an event that attracted 600 people and raised money for Special Olympics.

She turned coach when wives of Packer players and coaches battled area media personalities in the first Flag Football Game benefitting Cystic Fibrosis last November. And with the Packer wives, she manned a food barrel seeking donations for Paul's Pantry at the Packers-Bears game at Lambeau Field last season.

Upcoming for this pert and pretty pacesetter is the popular Packer Wives Style Show in November. Proceeds will go to Special Olympics.

Quite a list for a newcomer. "It was good to be busy, but I penciled myself in a little heavy," she admits.

A positive, people-person, Stephanie has been approached to be involved with numerous groups, but is careful what she takes on. "If there is conflict, one takes away from another (group), then it is not hard to say 'no.' If it doesn't conflict, I tend to feel I'd like to do everything asked of me," she explains. "But it's not possible. I just would spread myself too thin."

Being involved in community activities has always been important to Stephanie. For this friendly, vibrant, one-time secretary, the move to Green Bay–the Infantes' 11th in 24 years of marriage–has been a piece of cake. "I found it the easiest community to move into and become a part of," she says with a look of pleasure. "There are so many interesting things to do and interesting people to do them with."

It's also a close-knit community, she points out, aware she is readily recognized as the wife of the Packers' leader. When she uses a credit card or check, whatever she buys becomes public knowledge. "Even if it's briefs for Lindy, everyone knows about it," she laughingly says.

Being the wife of the head coach has its responsibilities in Stephanie's way of thinking. She would prefer to sit in the stands. "But not in my position," she says. "I find myself being careful. I don't go out of the house in rollers and am concerned about my appearance because I am and want to be a good reflection of Lindy and the Packers."

With a detailed calendar, she keeps a busy schedule of meetings, appearances and speaking engagements intermingled with her all-important family activities. "I'm organized, but I have to have it on the calendar," she affirms.

Stephanie's schedule naturally includes all Packers games, home and away. And now there will be trips to Kent State University in Ohio where 18-year-old son Brett is enrolled as a freshman. Son Brad, 17, is a senior at Southwest High School. The football player in the family, he plays tailback for the Southwest Trojans.

Despite her busy schedule, Stephanie still finds time for her favorite pasttime–shopping. This past year she's hit the stores and boutiques from Door County to Chicago for furnishings and accessories for their tastefully decorated home a short drive from Packer stadium.

While she's never been one to sit and do crafts, the energetic Mom admits to getting hooked on knitting since moving to Wisconsin. "It was so frustrating when I started, but now I dearly enjoy it." Deftly working her knits and purls, she's added several new sweaters to her wardrobe.

A family that appreciates quiet, out-of-the-spotlight time together, the Infantes enjoy skiing and getting away to their beach house in St. Augustine, FL.

A devout "fan," Stephanie is a frequent and knowledgeable visitor to the practice field.

STILL GOING STRONG AT 70

✦ The Packers' 70th Anniversary ✦

by Art Daley
Editor Emeritus

Grantland Rice, the dean of sportswriters, often referred to the Green Bay Packers as "the sports wonder of the world."

To Rice, who died in 1954, it was a wonder how Green Bay could survive in major league football.

Survive they did . . . and this year marks the 70th anniversary of the Packers' birth.

Seventy years old! It seems incredible. This odd-ball, this anomaly on the American professional sports scene is alive and well and looking forward to repeating the glory that was theirs for so many years.

Green Bay was and is a tank town compared to the population giants of the National Football League. Yet, they have grown into a staunch and powerful franchise—on and off the field, creating an image of stability.

The Pack's No. 1 credential: More league championships than any of the other NFL clubs—11 of them, including the first two Super Bowls.

Green Bay had a built-in inferiority complex in the early days. Let's face it, there had to be a lot of eye-rolling in the NFL back in 1933 when there were only two little-town teams left in the league—Portsmouth, OH, Spartans and Green Bay. One year later, Portsmouth became the Detroit Lions and Green Bay was alone.

Perhaps it was a little scary in the early 1930s, what with the country in the depths of the Great Depression, but the Packers survived a bankruptcy in 1935, quickly added two more championships, overcame a serious financial crisis in the winter of 1949-50, built a new stadium in 1957, and then blew the lid off the NFL with an amazing run of five championships in the 1960s.

Green Bay no longer has a complex over its size, although losing games in the 1970s and 1980s has led to some Green Bay bashing. To be sure, this will evaporate once the team regains the winning touch.

The Packers have an amazing underground of fans throughout the country and it has been likened to the huge following that Notre Dame has gained over the years. Green Bay and Notre Dame reek of tradition.

Actually, Notre Dame somehow figures in the birth of the Packers—not to mention a few glasses of beer (a year before prohibition), a sportswriter, an acute case of tonsillitis, and, of course, a football star from Green Bay East High School. Let's attend the birth:

Earl (Curly) Lambeau, East's captain and even a part-time coach, enrolled at Notre Dame in 1918 and made the varsity as a fullback under the famed coach, Knute Rockne. After the Christmas holidays, Curly developed a bad case of tonsillitis and returned to Green Bay for treatment. The doctor told him he couldn't remove the tonsils until the infection disappeared. By the time Curly recovered it was too late to go back to college that semester.

Lambeau got a job with the Indian Packing Company for $250 a month, a large salary at the time. College became further and further from his mind but he always had a big yen to play football.

During the summer of 1919 Curly and George W. Calhoun, who wrote sports for the Green Bay Press-Gazette, including a lot of copy on Lambeau, had a chance conversation over a glass of beer. When Curly told Cal about missing football, Calhoun said "why not get up a team in Green Bay. I'll help you and give you all the publicity you need."

Calhoun printed many stories in the Press-Gazette inviting players to come to a meeting at the newspaper office on August 11th. Some 25 players attended and Lambeau was elected captain and Calhoun manager. The first practice was set for September 3rd.

Lambeau got jerseys from the Packing Company, resulting in their unique name. The Packers played 11 games that season and won 10 of them. They played as a town team again in 1920 and then joined the NFL in 1921. The Packer saga had begun.

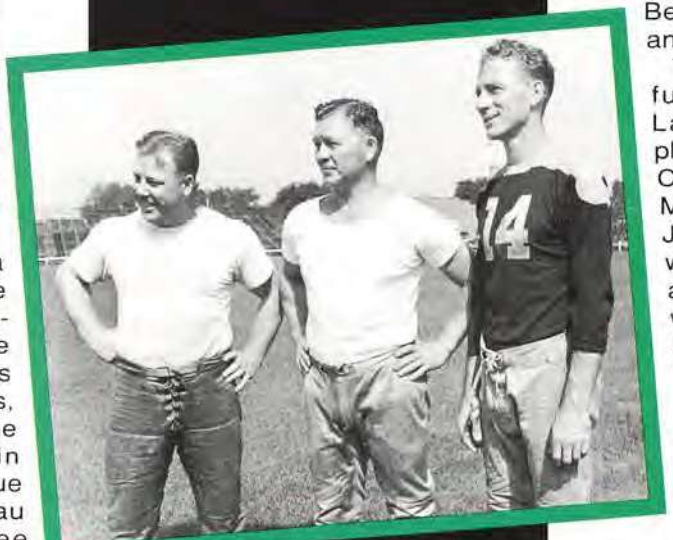
The Packers' official birth date is August 11, 1919. Now, 70 years and more than 1,000 pre-season, league and post-season games later, the Packers are getting ready for combat again–this time under their 10th head coach, one Lindy Infante.

The Packers, of course, are a Wisconsin team and through the magic of radio and then television, state residents have become natural-born Packers fans. Starting in the early 1930s, the Packers started playing some of their home games in Milwaukee and now five League games are played in Lambeau Field and three in Milwaukee County Stadium.

The 70-year history of the Packers is book-size but a capsule of the team's highlights and some low lights can be short-formed in the happenings of the "nine" years — 1919, '29, '39, etc. The nines close out with the unknown of 1989.

The kickoff year of 1919 has already been well documented with the actual birth of the Pack. World War I had been over almost a full year and the country was getting ready for the Roaring Twenties.

The cover of the program for the Packers' 1939 season opener against the cordially detested Chicago Bears. Pictured: Old City Stadium, built in 1925, filled to its capacity (24,800) for an earlier home game.



Historic Trio: Packer founder E. L. "Curly" Lambeau, center, who coached the team for the first 31 years of its existence, is flanked by Don Hutson, the legendary end who still holds the Packer's scoring record and Richard "Red" Smith, who became the first assistant coach in team history (1936) after retiring as a player.

The Great Flu epidemic was winding down and the Model T was on the horizon. Pro football was almost a dirty word compared to College Football. Yet, Green Bay had an active football team and its players were paid money to perform.

The Packers grew hardy in the 1920s and a saving factor was the actual incorporation of the team by Green Bay businessmen, headed by Andrew B. Turnbull, publisher of the Press-Gazette and the Pack's first president.

The second "nine" year, 1929, was the Packers' first big breakthrough in the NFL. They won what turned out to be the first of three consecutive championships, going unbeaten in a 13-game schedule. The only blot was a scoreless tie with Frankford, PA, Yellowjackets, later the Philadelphia Eagles. The Packers had beaten Frankford earlier 14-2.

The Pack's 12-0-1 record barely nosed out the New York Giants, who posted 13-1-1. New York's one defeat was administered by the Packers 20-6. The real highlight was the Packers' mastery of their hated rivals from Chicago, the Bears. Green Bay blanked the Bears three times, 23-0, 14-0 and 25-0.

The 1929 team had four future Hall of Famers—Lambeau, who finished his playing career that year; tackle Cal Hubbard, guard Mike Michalske and halfback Johnny Blood. Red Dunn was the team's quarterback and among the other stars were center Jug Earp, end Lavvie Dilweg and halfback Verne Lewellen.

The season of 1939 produced the Packers' fifth championship. The NFL had been divided into Divisions and Green Bay won the Western with 9-2 and the New York Giants won the Eastern with 10-1. The championship game was staged in Milwaukee State Fair Park and the Packers won in a breeze, 27-0. It was sweet revenge since the Giants had beaten the Pack 23-17 in the 1938 title game.

The fabled Don Hutson was in his fifth season in '39 and the Packers, with Cecil Isbell and Arnie Herber passing, became the NFL's aerial circus. Among the other stars of that team were linemen Larry Craig, Baby Ray, Buckets Goldenberg, Pete Tinsley and Charlie Brock and backs Clarke Hinkle, Joe Laws and Andy Uram. Hutson, Hinkle and Herber made the Hall of Fame.

Ten years later the amazing Lambeau Era ground to a halt. The Packers had two straight losing seasons, worsened by a 2-10 finish in 1949. The natives wanted a new coach and new direction and the Packers were in dire straits financially due largely to the player war with the young All-America Conference. In fact, the Packers played an intra-squad game at City Stadium on Thanksgiving Day and raised $50,000 to stay afloat.

The one bright spot on the field was halfback Tony Canadeo, who became the Pack's first 1,000-yard rusher that year. His patented runs around right end produced most of his 1,052 yards in his 208 carries, average 5.1.

The season of 1959 couldn't come soon enough. Things were tough in the 1950s, although a new steel and concrete stadium was built in 1957. The dawn of '59 brought a new coach, one Vincent T. Lombardi, a former New York Giant assistant.

The Packers had just finished the 1958 campaign with their worst record, 1-10-1. Lombardi performed what seemed like a miracle at the time, posting a 7-5 record. His first team won its first three games, lost five in a row and then won the last four, including the last two on the west coast. The victory-starved fans crowded the airport to welcome back the team after its final victory.

Lombardi's men went on to win five championships in the 1960s and nine of his players made the Hall of Fame—Jim Taylor, Bart Starr, Forrest Gregg, Ray Nitschke, Herb Adderley, Willie Davis, Jim Ringo, Paul Hornung and Willie Wood. Lombardi, himself, led that parade into Canton, a year after he died in 1970.

The 50th anniversary of the Packers in 1969 saw Coach Phil Bengtson's men come up with an 8-6 record, an improvement on the previous year's 6-7-1. However, the key players were aging veterans of the Lombardi years and new material provided little help. The Bays got off to a 5-2 start but three straight losses at mid-season robbed them of a chance at the playoffs.

Bart Starr, the Pack's favorite son who played 16 seasons and became head coach in 1975, had great expectations in the Pack's 60th anniversary season of 1979 because his 1978 team just missed the playoffs with an 8-7-1 record. An unbelievable string of injuries, headed by linebacker John Anderson, ruined the Pack's chances of a good season.

A 1979 highlight was the first Monday night game ever played at Lambeau Field. The 1-3 Packers made the most of the national telecast by soundly whipping the 3-1 New England Patriots 27-14, in the 1,000th game in Green Bay's history.

Other than a 5-3 record in the strike-shortened season of 1982, the Packers haven't had a winning season since 1978.

But hope springs eternal and the incurable optimism that was Curly Lambeau's benchmark still pervades the real Packer fan 70 years later.

ZEKE & KOS JOIN TRIPLE-TITLE ELITE

At any point in time, a diverse blend of personalities and talents goes into the chemistry, the making of a championship football team.

In the 1960s, for classic example, Vince Lombardi's Packers–then enroute to creating a dynasty–were an amalgam of legendary characters and personnae.

There was the nonchalant and supremely confident "Golden Boy," Paul Hornung, who also happened to be one of the most accomplished and versatile performers in the National Football League's 70-year history.

And his urbane and unflappable running mate, Max McGee, who made the difficult catches look easy and vice versa.

In contrast, there was the dedicated and meticulous "Mr. Quarterback," Bart Starr, whose commitment and cerebral skills enabled him to preside over a methodical and productive ball control offense with highly consistent success.

And, on the other side of the football, the ferocious and freewheeling Ray Nitschke, a model of intensity who stalked enemy ball carriers with resounding effect from his middle linebacker station.

Needless to say, there were a number of others who pooled their talents to forge the most successful team in NFL annals (five championships in a seven-year span). And two of them–quarterback Zeke Bratkowski and defensive tackle Ron Kostelnik–were accorded long deserved recognition for their substantial contributions to one of the greatest dynasties in sports history when they were enshrined in the Packer Hall of Fame during last February's induction dinner in Green Bay.

Though less flamboyant than the colorful Hornung and McGee, they also were significant factors–in contrasting roles–in the Packers' drive to three consecutive NFL championships in 1965-66-67.

It is doubtful, in fact, if the Green and Gold could have accomplished that triple-title parlay–to this day the only such skein recorded since the league adopted the playoff system in 1933–without them.

Bratkowski became the premier rescue quarterback in pro football history during this memorable span. In no fewer than 14 games, he was called upon to take over for his fellow field general and close friend when Starr was sidelined by injuries.

Easily one of the most gifted passers in NFL annals, Bratkowski escorted the Packers to victory in ten of those 14 games–an impressive batting average in any kind of competition.

From the standpoint of team and personal history, his most remarkable performance came in the 1965 Western Conference playoff against the Baltimore Colts in Green Bay's Lambeau Field when Starr was felled by an explosive tackle on the Packers' first offensive play of the afternoon.

Bratkowski, summoned from the bench by Lombardi, responded with one of the finest efforts of his career, completing 22 of 39 passes for 250 yards–including two-for-two on the overtime march to a decisive Don Chandler field goal which gave the Packers a 13-10 victory in one of the tightest struggles in Green Bay's long and successful playoff history.

Without that victory, of course, Starr would not have been able to return the following week to lead Green Bay to the first of those three straight championships. And without it, none of those three titles would have been possible.

Starr, who flew in from Phoenix to present his old colleague for enshrinement in the Packer "Hall," labeled their respective roles a matter of timing.

Bratkowski, he said, "was extremely capable of being a starting quarterback in this league–and was, for the Bears and the Rams.

"His timing was not nearly as good as mine. If he had been here when Coach Lombardi came, instead of Bart Starr, then all the things which occurred with the Packers in those days would be Zeke Bratkowski-driven.

"When someone is willing to subordinate himself to the degree that he did to help me, that says more than I could possibly ever say about Zeke Bratkowski."

Adapting to a secondary position was not the most challenging aspect of Bratkowski's role as "Super Sub," Zeke indicated.

The psychological part, he explained, was the most difficult.

"One of the biggest problems was not playing–getting prepared and then not going in," he said, on induction day, of the need to be continually alert for the impromptu S.O.S. "The letdown after the ball game or trying to come down from that mental preparation was difficult. It was tough. It's a sleepless night, really, Sunday night, because you prepared yourself to play and you were ready to go and then it would start all over again on Monday and Tuesday. It's not an easy thing–the psychological aspect is more difficult than the physical part of it."

But "you get a little tougher mentally . . . It just makes you a little callous to it and you have to be ready."

Zeke found that his previous experience as an Air Force pilot along with his close relationship with Starr, helped him maintain the proper perspective.

"They use the connotation 'backup' and I guess that's what it was,"

he said. "But Bart and I were so close in our studying and everything, we never thought of it like that. We just, in a sense, just prepared ourselves to go out and do the best job we could and, hopefully, there wasn't a drop in the execution.

"The term 'backup,' sometimes, I just never even paid any attention to that because Bart and I were so close and studied so closely together. When he was in there, I was his best rooter. When I was in there, he was my best rooter. I never really gave that (backup) much thought."

His Air Force training—with a Florida research and development squadron—proved valuable in the preparation process, he said.

The primary application was in the "discipline and procedure aspect of being a pilot, where you double-check and cross-check everything and have to prepare yourself for emergencies. The discipline of learning helps you from the standpoint of studying and the responsibilities you have."

The physical factor also was a challenge, Bratkowski admits.

"You have no chance to warm up. You have to go right then," he said. "It's like parachute jumping–you have to be perfect the first time."

Kostelnik's role as a defensive lineman was less visible, perhaps, but of comparable importance in the overall scheme of things. He was a five-year starter on a defense which held opponents to an average of 15.4 points per game during the '60s, lowest points-allowed ratio in the league over that decade.

The massive Pennsylvanian, a second round draft selection out of the University of Cincinnati in 1961, moved into the starting lineup alongside the late Henry Jordan at tackle in 1964 and played a key role in Green Bay's front four throughout those three consecutive title seasons in '65-66-67.

His most memorable moment came in the 1966 championship game at Dallas when he registered the imposing total of 14 tackles to spearhead the Packers' defense in a 34-27 victory over the Cowboys at Big D's Cotton Bowl.

Typically, Kostelnik played down his contributions to the cause.

"As a defensive tackle, you couldn't have been in a safer position," he said with becoming modesty. "I had Willie Davis on my left side, Henry Jordan on my right side and (Ray) Nitschke behind me. Each one of them was all-pro many times and two of them are in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. So, no question, that they drove me to higher levels than the talent I might have had. Whatever I'm receiving (in being enshrined), a lot of it goes back to the teamwork among the four of us."

Kostelnik, today a highly successful businessman in Appleton, WI, also let it be known that he doesn't mind not being as well known as the Davises, Jordans and Nitschkes.

"I know exactly where I fit in life," he said. "I loved being part of the team. I recognize I was just part of that team and an outstanding group of individuals. You look at all those players. . . and I consider myself a normal, good ex-defensive tackle. . .

"There were superior people there who are great to watch on films."

Reflecting upon where it all began for him as a Packer, Kostelnik confessed to having been "totally shocked" when drafted in the second round.

"Only he (Lombardi) could probably answer what he saw in me to do that."

He added, "As it turned out . . .I was in the right place at the right time. I was there when they needed an auxiliary defensive tackle and fit the bill for what Lombardi was looking for. . . He slated me to be "Hawg" Hanner's replacement." ©

More Than A Football Team

Packers Impact Many Areas of Community Life

In "spiritual" terms, the Packers have been a significant factor in the Green Bay area since the fall of 1919—just a year after the close of World War I, when they were founded as a town team by a youthful Curly Lambeau.

The joy or gloom which pervades the area of a Monday morning during the football season–in direct relation to the result of the previous Sunday's game–long has reflected what has become a way of life in "Titletown" and provided an eloquent testimonial to the fans' emotional involvement in the Green and Gold's on-the-field fortunes.

In economic terms, the Packers' impact upon Green Bay and environs has been well documented.

And, to be sure, it is considerable. The last time such a reading was taken officially, a 1986 survey placed the figure at approximately $35 million.

But the Packers' contributions to the commonwealth cannot be measured in mere dollars, as important as they may be, or, for that matter, only in how the team's artistic success affects its loyalists' collective psyche.

Although less evident to the public at large, and thus more difficult to express in specific terms, each year it is becoming increasingly evident that the Green and Gold have become woven into the very fabric of community life in a variety of ways.

The organization has, for example:

- Taken a leadership role in the drive to curb drug use among young people.

- Established a Green Bay Packer Foundation, which in 1988 issued initial grants in excess of $42,000 to local institutions and groups such as the Girl Scouts, the Bellin School of Nursing and the Brown County Library.

- Provided the major support to the Wisconsin Chapter of the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation through the Packer 65 Roses Club, which in 1988 raised a record $67,000 to continue the search for a cure for the dreaded disease.

- Joined the Milwaukee Brewers, Milwaukee Bucks and Milwaukee Admirals in funding the establishment of the National Sports Law Institute at Marquette University.

- Continued to provide role models for Wisconsin youth through the medium of the club's subsidized Speakers' Bureau, whose player-speakers emphasize the importance of a good education to success in life, along with the positive values athletics can teach, such as commitment and discipline, in their speaking appearances.

Far Left: An animated Greg Blache, Packer defensive line coach, underscores the importance of a good education to success in life in a talk to junior high students.

Tim Harris, Don Bracken and Brent Fullwood sign autographs at a business fair.

As an organization, the Packers began to address the growing drug problem in 1985 when Judge Robert J. Parins, the team's president and chief executive officer, authorized appropriation of $84,000 to fund the Mendez drug education program in Green Bay and area schools.

Since that time, when the Packers' contribution funded initial training of teachers, the Mendez program has been expanded to a point where all students—kindergarten through ninth grade—are involved in prevention education programs in the Green Bay School District, as well as many neighboring public and private schools.

The Packer Foundation's grants also have quickly borne fruit. An $8,200 contribution to the Brown County Library has spawned salutary results. Utilized to provide a summer reading program for children in 1988, it saw no fewer than 6,756 children join the Summer Reading Club, representing a startling 73 per cent increase over 1987's participation in the same program.

The Packer Corporation's commitment to the 65 Roses Club was underscored by a $4,385 contribution from the organization, including a $2,500 corporate donation, plus $65 for each of the 29 touchdowns the Packers scored during the 1988 National Football League season.

More than $21,000 also was derived from proceeds of the first Lindy Infante-Celebrity Invitational Golf Classic, named in the Packer head coach's honor and held in 1988.

A bikeathon produced another $12,000, while a "Casino Night" brought in $5,000 and a "Ski with the Stars" event netted an additional $3,500.

Meanwhile, the speakers' bureau expanded its horizons dramatically. Packer players and coaches made no fewer than 168 appearances throughout the state of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan during 1988's off-season, for example, more than double the number recorded in 1987.

In the eight years the Packer organization has offered the subsidized program, it has spent more than $200,000 to make these player appearances possible.

Actually, "speakers' bureau" is something of a misnomer. Those 168 appearances ran the gamut—from taking part in bikeathons, bowlathons, skateathons and running contests for various fund-raisers to playing in the February "Snow Bowl" for the Waupun Correctional Employees' benefit, to visiting Veterans Administration hospitals, to church father-and-son banquets, to signing autographs at a post office open house, to making commencement addresses.

And there were others: Taking part in a milking contest in honor of June Dairy Month, waiting on tables at a "Taste of Milwaukee" food celebration, an assignment handled with relish by free safety Ken Stills, doing a reading at a moonlight reading function for children, and speaking in behalf of the "Just Say No To Drugs" program.

All of this leads to one inevitable conclusion: To Green Bay and the state of Wisconsin, the Packers are more than just a football team.

Fullwood in Flight: Brent Fullwood vaults over the top behind blocker Keith Uecker, grappling with the Bears' Mike Singletary (50) for supremacy.

N0026

It's another full house (57,095) in sun-swept Lambeau Field, which annually has been sold out on a season ticket basis since 1960.

Walter Stanley (87) returning kickoff against Vikings, scans situation for possible "daylight" as Minnesota's Walker Lee Ashley (58) and Rick Fenney (31) attempt to close off escape route.

Before the Battle: A bandaged hand and a "detached" helmet are spotless as their owner relaxes on the sideline before the opening kickoff.

BEAR WEARY
It's Time For A Change

Politicians striving to unseat long-time incumbents have a hackneyed term for it...Whenever the opposition might be vulnerable by way of sheer longevity, they inevitably and loudly insist: "It's time for a change."

The Packers, with specific reference to the National Football Conference's Central Division race, enthusiastically second this venerable sentiment.

They, not to mention their fellow sufferers–the Minnesota Vikings, Detroit Lions and Tampa Bay Buccaneers–long since have grown weary of the Chicago Bears' domination of the division, a situation which has begun to border upon the obnoxious.

Mike Ditka's swaggering Chicagoans have won the CD championship the last five years in succession, in the event anyone has forgotten, and now are threatening to match the 1970's dynasty of the Vikings, who won six consecutive titles under the impassive Bud Grant from 1973 through 1978.

A year ago, the Minnesotans were convinced they were in position to depose the Midway Monsters–and they might well have, had it not been for the Packers' intervention. The Purple Gang finished just one game to the rear of the Bears with an 11-5 record and two of those five defeats came at the hands of the Green and Gold, who prevailed 34-14 in the Minneapolis Metrodome in mid-season and repeated that triumph with an 18-6 victory in their home season finale at Lambeau Field.

The Bears continued to prove no less than formidable, closing out with a 12-4 record. Over their five-year reign, they have won 62 games while losing 17, an imposing 78.5 percentage. In the interim, by unhappy contrast, their four division rivals have had to take pot luck, artistically speaking. The Vikings have posted a 38-14 mark during this span, followed by the Packers at 29-49-1, Detroit at 24-54-1 and Tampa Bay at 19-60-1.

In The Game Against Cystic Fibrosis, Winning IS Everything
Cystic Fibrosis kills children. It deprives them of their hopes... their dreams...their future. It takes them out of the game before they have a chance to play.
But for many, the game isn't over...and there's still a chance. You are a key player...and it's time for you to go in and make a contribution. Time for you to run up the score against Cystic Fibrosis.
Join the Green Bay Packer's 65 Roses Club now. TODAY. Because we can still win. And because it means so much.

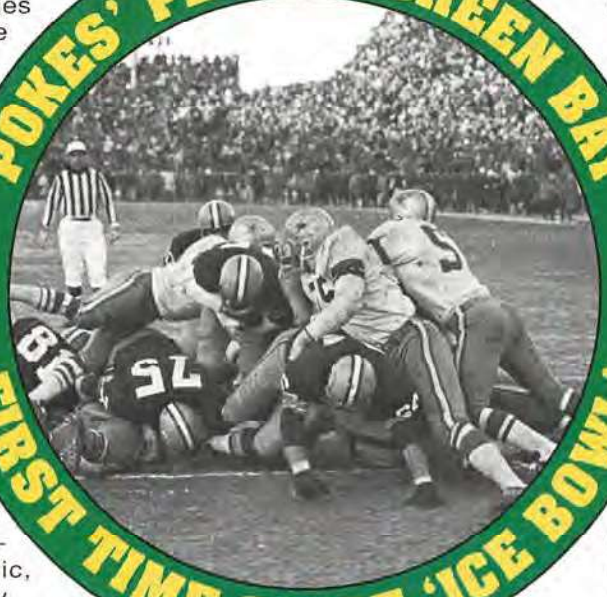
'POKES' PLAY IN GREEN BAY FIRST TIME SINCE 'ICE BOWL'



The last time the Dallas Cowboys played in Green Bay, the legendary Vince Lombardi was the Packers' head coach and Lyndon Baines Johnson was President of these United States.

The date was December 31, 1967–New Year's Eve afternoon–the day of the now fabled "Ice Bowl," when the thermometer registered an Arctic 16 below zero and the wind chill was a minus (-)46 degrees at kickoff.

Since acclaimed by a number of veteran observers as the greatest pro football game of all time, it saw the Packers prevail in the final seconds on Bart Starr's celebrated "sneak" into the end zone from one yard out for the winning touchdown in a dramatic, come-from-behind 21-17 victory.

The Cowboys will be returning to Green Bay at long last on October 8, marking their first visit since that historic afternoon, a span of 22 years.

The Packers' 1989 schedule also will be marked by two other noteworthy visits to their green and gold home, Lambeau Field.

September 17, the New Orleans Saints–who have been in the National Football League since 1967– will make their first appearance ever on Green Bay soil. The Saints have made seven previous visits to Wisconsin but all of them have been to Milwaukee–the most recent in 1985.

Another "first" will occur when the Packers close their regular season home schedule against Kansas City on December 10. The Chiefs, the Packers' victims in the first Super Bowl (35-10 at the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Jan. 15, 1967), will be paying their first visit to Titletown since entering the NFL in 1970 when the merger of the National and American Football Leagues was formally effected.

Tampa Bay's Buccaneers are no strangers to Lambeau Field but when they move into Green Bay's football shrine, September 10, they will be involved in yet another "first." The Bucs, with quarterback Vinny Testaverde at the throttle, will be providing the Packers' opening day opposition for the first time since Tampa Bay entered the league in 1976.

The 69th opener in Green Bay's long and lustrous pro football history, it will launch a substantial "home stand" for the Packers, who will be playing four of their first five games in Green Bay or Milwaukee.

Following that inaugural against Tampa Bay, the Green and Gold will welcome the Saints to Lambeau Field for the first time before taking their initial road trip of the season, an excursion to Anaheim, CA, for an exchange with John Robinson's Los Angeles Rams, September 24.

It then will be back to America's Dairyland for another pair of home appearances. The first, on October 1, will find them making their maiden regular season showing at County Stadium, where they entertain the Atlanta Falcons, who last performed at Milwaukee in 1972 when the late Norm Van Brocklin was their head coach.

A week later, the Cowboys will visit Lambeau Field for the first time without the legendary Tom Landry as their head coach. When the Pokes line up for the kickoff, they will be operating under the direction of their new field leader, Jimmy Johnson, previously head coach at the University of Miami (FL).

Back-to-back road trips will be next up, the first of which will take the Packers to the Minneapolis Metrodome for a showdown with the Vikings, early favorites in some quarters to win Super Bowl XXIV, (to be staged in New Orleans January 28).

It will be followed by a second consecutive trip to Miami, through a rare scheduling quirk. The Packers also played in Joe Robbie Stadium, site of Super Bowl XXIII, in 1988.

Next will come two more home dates–against the Detroit Lions at Milwaukee, October 29, and at Green Bay, November 5, when the Packers host their oldest enemies, the Chicago Bears, in the 138th renewal of professional football's most storied rivalry.

Another NFC Central Division test–against the Lions at the Pontiac, Silverdome–will follow, Nov. 12, before the Green and Gold enplane for the West Coast and what looms as their most formidable challenge of the season, against the world champion 49ers.

The Packers, who will be making their first appearance in San Francisco since 1974 when Dan Devine was head coach, will end a 15-year absence from the picturesque City by the Bay, November 19, when they return to windswept Candlestick Park to take on Joe Montana and friends, reigning Super Bowl royalty.

A week later, the Packers will be back in County Stadium for a rematch with the Vikings Sunday, November 26, a match which will wrap up their regular season business at Milwaukee, before visiting Tampa to re-engage the Buccaneers December 3.

The Chiefs will close out the home schedule December 10, a prelude to a 139th imbroglio with the Bears in Chicago's Soldier Field Sunday afternoon, December 17.

The Packers end their regular season agenda in a holiday rematch with the Cowboys on Christmas Eve afternoon, Sunday, December 24.
